

HARKERS ISLAND NOTES.

At last ladies and gentlemen the people of Harkers Island have made a great discovery. They have found the cause of so much appendicitis on the island a few months back. I understand the doctor's latest reports are to the effect that the great cause of appendicitis here is from walking on the main road. Whoever would have thought of such a thing! But, since one comes to think of it, it sounds reasonable, that it is one familiar with this main road. There are more bumps on it to the square inch than there is on an orange peel.

While we are on the subject of roads, it might be well to expound the merits of the new corporation being formed in the Metropolis of H. I. A road construction Co. is being formed to pave our roads with O Boy Gum. Quite a project, believe me. That's about the only way we will ever have a hard surfaced road.

Rev. D. R. Earnhardt of this place had a tough spell of sickness last week. The idea hit him that it would be a novel experience to visit the light ship this month. So he did. He says that the best he can remember he became very much disinterested in China and the affairs of the far East at the Inlet. The sea was rough and they had taken too much freight so Mr. Earnhardt proceeded to unload. He says the light ship is all right but she's in the wrong place.

The people of the island were delighted to have Congressman Abernethy over from Cape Lookout. The most delightful thing was his great interest in Cape Lookout and Harker's Island. He made the statement that he should continue to come to Cape Lookout if he had to wade. All who visit Harkers Island or Cape Lookout feel the same as he asked the O'Niels if Harkers Island isn't the finest place in the State to live bar none. I have an idea that they wouldn't swap their estate here for "The Big Bluff of Morehead City."

There were four Harker's Island Fords on the roads of the main land Sunday. What do you know about that for grit and determination. To carry a car from Harkers Island across the water to the main land. If people travel that way at such odds, how many more would travel it with moderate conveniences? I wonder how many of you reading this tonight would have come to Harker's Island last Sunday had there been some way to make it without endangering your car. I'd like to have your name and address on a postal card, if it doesn't inconvenience you any, you'll find my name at the bottom of this (I haven't a name for it) and you surely know my address.

PARIS SENDS US FROCKS MADE OF SOFT FABRICS

LIFE is just one little summer frock after another, when day and afternoon dresses are considered. A tailored suit or two, a sports outfit or so, and a new party frock, acquired in the early part of a season, and the shopping incident, so far as these things are concerned, for the average woman, is closed. But day and afternoon dresses are another story of the continued-in-or-next kind, and drawn out to the length of the season.

Paris knows the appeal of simple and becoming afternoon frocks and is always busy turning out new ones. Also Paris dotes on graceful lines, and on soft fabrics that will make them; hence the perennial favor of crepe de chine, crepe georgette, and other crepes. They are the most flattering of all fabrics. A frock of black crepe de chine with touches of silver lace, is sent to us by Jenny, to be worn over white or a colored slip; it is shown at the left of the sketch. Callot presents a frock of beige crepe with outline embroidery in coral, green and black. A smart simplicity in the design of these frocks makes them ideal for midsummer wear.

Midsummer brings in some delightful new interpretations of the styles, showing crepe in the company of other materials and combinations of two kinds of crepe in afternoon frocks. Among the new modes, straight underfrocks of printed crepe are short sleeved, forming a background for long tunics of organdie, posed over them. The tunics have narrow belts of the organdie, kimono sleeves, and are open down the front. Crepe satin and georgette crepe, in two contrasting colors, are combined in frocks of similar effect, one a model made of crepe satin open at the front with jabot lapels, over a very long vest of georgette. A girdle of the crepe satin is tied at the front, its long ends falling over a fan of fine plaits set in the skirt front.

Another midsummer whim appears in the liking for sheer black frocks, usually posed, over slips in flesh color or pink, and for all-black frocks of crepe de chine, cleverly designed and very graceful.
