SAVING TIME

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"It isn't the money one makes that counts," the proverb says, "but what one saves."

I am not so sure that the principle holds with reference to time. It isn't the time one saves that really matters, it is what one does with it.

Foreigners are amazed at the number and the complicated character of our time-saving devices which run from automatic telephones that eliminate the hello girl to electric washing machines which make doing the family washing a brief morning delight.

"What do Americans do with all the time they save?" some one asked me not long ago. It is a question the answer to which is not so easily found.

The Galtons have scrapped their hot-air furnace and put in gas. It took so much time shoveling coal and taking out ashes and cleaning up the dirt which the sooty old coal furnace made, that Mrs. Galton was kept running up and down continually. The new heating apparatus is automatic, you know. All you have to do in the fall when the first cold spell comes on unexpectedly, is to light the pilot, turn on the gas, and there you are. A thermostat with the intelligence of a human being takes care of the rest. That is, maybe it does.

Mrs. Galton does not find that she has a great deal more time than she previously had. The clock which controls the thermostat has to be wound, and there are certain mechanical devices which have to be looked after, and then she is afraid of an explosion, or that something will happen to the machinery, so she puts in a good deal of time worrying, or she runs up and down the cellar stairs to look things over almost as often as she did when she was shoveling coal, and she doesn't find that she has any more real leisure than she had before.

I have never been sure, for instance, that the time we are supposed to save by the use of the telephone is not more than offset by the time that is wasted by that same device.

I am afraid we waste as much time keeping time-saving devices in order as we save.

CHILD'S HOME LIFE INFLUENCES HABITS

By F. H. Jeter

RALEIGH, Oct. 5—It is the home that the first habits are formed which are so fundamental to health and to character.

"Habits of eating, and of food likes and dislikes are formed early," says Miss Myra DeHaven Woodruff, home demonstration research worker at State College. "I know of a young woman who was unfortunately separated from her father when she was a young child and did not see him again until she was 23 years old. She and her friends had wondered why she had acquired certain peculiar food likes, such as vinegar on snap beans, gravy on pie, and certain others. She was astonished to find that her father had the same likes."

Habits of neatness also begin early. Miss Woodruff says. Some children from a crowded tenement section were given scholarships to an expensive nursery school. None of the children were over four years old at the time but when they went back to their crowded homes, they insisted on putting away their wraps as a result of their nursery school training. The habit of being neat or not being neat usually carries through life.

Habits of being prompt are important. So are those of playing fair, of courtesy, or truthfulness, of honesty, of perseverance, of independence. All of these habits have their beginnings in the home long before the child goes to school. Not only are these habits formed in the home but many fundamental attitudes originate within the family, says Miss Woodruff. The attitude towards religions is pretty well set before school age. Attitudes towards marriage, towards parenthood, towards people are formed early and unfortunately frequently become fixed too soon.

The home can make or break many maladjustments which appear later in adults life.
