Washington Snapshots

Taken by The Helm News Service WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 10—

Even by conservative Democrats it is being said that it was a new Hoover who disclosed himself the other day in Iowa. It was at least a Hoover standing up with a new vigor of language in his own defense, and making an appeal to his countrymen which was touched with an emotion not hitherto supposed to be characteristic of him. Whatever the effect of his speech upon the Presidential campaign, he may rest in the belief that in it he has put forth the best that is in him.

The White House and Republican National Committee headquarters received word from the West that President Hoover's Des Moines speech and his trip were causing a favorable reaction in the Middle West at Republican National Committee headquarters, it was predicted the speech at Des Moines would be greatly strengthen the Republican cause. It is expected that organization efforts will be much intensified among the Republicans in many States.

On the other hand, leaders of the Democratic party laid down a barrage against President Hoover's utterances at Des Moines and hailed the patching up of the Smith-Roosevelt differences as more than an offset to anything accomplished by the Chief Executive in his mission to Iowa and nearby States. Attacks on the speech came from Speaker John N. Garner, Democratic Vice-Presidential candidate; Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi; Representative Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, and other Democrats. Speaker Garner, who was criticized by the President, challenged the President in turn on his course on farm legislation, said the President vetoed the measure that would have assured the farmers the credit necessary to prevent foreclosure, and declared that in the light of Mr. Hoover's failure to fulfill past promises, "either his sincerity or his ability to make good his latest pledges is seriously open to question."

Stung by President Hoover's indictment of their policies and leaders in his Des Moines speech, the Democrats have unlimbered their heaviest verbal artillery in an effort to counteract whatever gains the President may have won by his invasion of the West. Led by Speaker Garner, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate, himself the target of some of Mr. Hoover's blows, the opposition undertook to convince the Nation that whatever of good there was in the President's address was plagiarized from the Democrats and that, in any event, the record of the last four years proves the President unable to fulfill his campaign promises.

According to Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, President Hoover will carry every Atlantic seaboard State from Maine to Maryland. He asserted will go Republican with 20,000, and New Hampshire will be carried for the President by 12,000 to 15,000 votes, half of the usual majority. Of his own chances for reelection the Senator was not so sanguine. He expects to win, he said, but does not believe his majority will much exceed 6,000. The Republicans, he conceded, have a "fight on their hands in every State."

The assertion that President Hoover's Des Moines speech will "win or lost him the West" is probably more dramatic than accurate. Fundamentally what has been determining the West is the distress of the last three years. That condition cannot be made normal overnight by one man or one speech. It is conceivable enough the farmers might compare Mr. Hoover's utterances about the farm problem with Governor Roosevelt's and prefer the former. This might inspire enough farm-voters with confidence in the President to form a margin sufficient to make the difference between Republican and Democratic success in several states.

Ex-Governor Smith's successful fight at Albany against Mr. John P. Curry and the Tammany allies seems to have ended the friendly relations which began when they followed thru for him at the national convention. Gratitude is one of his strong traits. It did not interfere, however, with his conscientious belief that Lieutenant Governor Lehman should be nominated for Governor. Having failed to persuade Mr. Curry to abandon his opposition, the former Governor fought him to a finish. Credit for the result should go largely to him.

Taken all in all, it is a common remark that there is little or no enthusiasm this year for either Republican or Democratic candidate for President. People, it is said, are going to vote so much for Mr. Hoover as against and not so much for Mr. Roosevelt as against Mr. Hoover. That leaves out of account the regular party members who will vote for one candidate or the other because that candidate is offered by their party. And also omits from consideration the enthusiasm of the regular Democrats, who think they see a prospect of victory for the first time in sixteen years, but their enthusiasm would seem to be not so much for their candidate as it is for the prospect of victory. But the voters who are not impelled by party regularity are preparing to vote against Mr. Roosevelt because they think he is dangerously radical or against Mr. Hoover because the depression happened to occur in his administration.

Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Democrat of Montana, who arrived here from the West, declared that part of the country had changed its mind on prohibition. He predicted that if Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt were elected, Congress would legalize beer, and said it probably would do so in the short session this winter. Former dry states in the West are "afame" with the idea of modifying the Volstead act, Senator Wheeler said. His prediction of early legalizing of beer was disputed by dry leaders. Dr. E. C. Dwyddie, executive secretary of the national prohibition board of strategy, predicted there would be no modification of the Volstead act this winter. Other dries predicted long delay.

Announcement that the United Repeal Council, representing organizations having more than 3,000,000 members, will support, regardless of party, candidates for the House and Senate who favor the unqualified and unconditional repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, was made here by P. S. du Pont, chairman of the organization. Where there is a contest between those who stand for out right repeal and those who favor either the Eighteenth Amendment, or merely a change in it, the council will support those who are for out-right repeal.

The Government will, if the process of economic recovery now probably begun is as slow as it may reasonably be expected to be, experience somewhat the same awakening that business itself has gone through. Government is slower to face realities than business is, for the simple reason that the necessity of self-preservation does not operate as strongly upon government as it does upon business. Business must face realities or perish. A Government can go on living in a fool's paradise for quite a while.
