 Building & Grounds

We hope to begin real soon on screening our buildings and finish repairing and painting all buildings. There are thirty-four buildings at our institution. Our grounds have not had the attention they deserve, but we have been so busy with farm and garden work that we have not been able to get to them. Here's hoping that we can do a lot of beautifying by fall.

To Welfare Officers
 I know the Welfare Officers and other County officials are wondering why they can never get a child in Caswell Training School. For the same reason, that when a pitcher is full of water you cannot get another drop in it. No expansion of this institution in about four years. We now have seven hundred on waiting list. When we do have a vacancy by death or parole, this vacancy has to be filled by a child of same sex, age and approximately same mentality. Then, too, our maintenance appropriation is almost exhausted. On account of the small appropriation and great rise in prices, we have to take those who can pay something. We had a little space at the beginning of the year in one building, but no beds and no money to buy beds, so from time to time we have borrowed a bed from the Hospital and on entering new children, we have asked them to furnish a bed, so we could replace the hospital bed. We are skating on very thin ice.

 Our Boys and Girls
 In our Junior Ward, we have a sweet little girl who cannot walk. Every time I see her, she begs me to get her a wheel chair so she can get out and enjoy fresh air and sunshine. This little girl is quite bright, talks well, but oh, so patient, willing to be put off from time to time. She would have had a wheel chair long ago, but for lack of funds. I wonder if there is not a Sunday School Class somewhere who will adopt this child and scout around and find a second hand wheel chair for this dear little girl, then you could sing with great hope of reward — "Will there be any stars in my Crown."

CHEAP GAINS MADE BEFORE PIGS WEANED

By F. H. Jeter
 Raleigh, April 23.—At no time in a pig's life will he make as cheap gains as when he is properly fed during the suckling period.
 "One should be guided in feeding spring-farrowed pigs by the use to be made of these pigs when they are ready for slaughter," says Earl M. Hostetler, in charge of swine research for the North Carolina Experiment Station at State College. "During the suckling period however, all pigs should be fed the same regardless of how soon they are to be marketed. If the sow is to farrow two litters of pigs annually, she should be full fed during the last five or six weeks of the suckling period so that she might supply her own body as well as that of the litter with the necessary nutriment."

 Hostetler points out that where the sow is fed by hand, the pigs should be allowed access to shelled corn in a creep in addition to what they may get from the sow's feed. Where the sow is fed from a self-feeder, the pigs may eat with her and will need no additional feed

During the period before the pigs are weaned, it is important for the sow and her litter to have ample and fresh, succulent grazing. This will stimulate the milk flow and encourage growth in the young pigs. The corn or other carbohydrates fed should be supplemented with an adequate supply of protein, such as fish meal or mung beans, Hostetler says.

He also points out that spring pigs intended for sale 180-240 should be fed to gain as rapidly as possible. These pigs intended as breeding animals should also be full fed until they weigh about 75 pounds each, then the grain ration may be limited.

The pigs intended to be kept for a home meat supply next winter should receive a limited feed until time to push them for slaughter.
 About 100 per cent of the rasher plants recently set in Caldwell county are living and the growers are beginning spring cultivation.
 Surry County peach growers report an excellent outlook for a good fruit crop this season despite the freezing weather of late winter.
