A FRUIT FOR pretty Lips

AMY in Charles Dickens' "Little Dorrit" was commanded by Mrs. General to say "papa, potatoes, poultry, prunes and prisms—especially prunes and prisms" because that "gives a pretty form to the lips." Fortunately we have learned better than that, and no longer command our little lasses to use these words for that particular reason, but we have discovered other reasons why prunes, at least, are a very good thing for them to eat, or else drink in the form of prune juice.

Prevent Lip Pallor
Prunes, according to the Oregon State College Extension Service, are a wholesome, nutritious, economical food, because they supply energy, are a good source of iron, contain other necessary minerals, contain vitamins, are a mild laxative, supplement the milk diet of infants and are a desirable food for all children. Modern children are no longer urged to pronounce the word in order to pucker up their pretty lips, but they are urged to eat the fruit because it helps to prevent pallor of the lips whether puckered or not.
Now Widely Available
Both prunes and prune juice are available in cans. The prune juice, perhaps, is not so widely distributed as the fruit itself, but you can make delectable drinks, too, with the juice contained in the canned fruit. Here, for instance, is the way to make an excellent
Prune Punch: Mix together the juice only from a No. 3 can fresh prunes, one-fourth cup lime juice and two cups water. Pour over ice and serve in punch glasses. Makes ten glasses.

DESTROY COTTON STALKS TO CHECK BOLL WEEVILS
Raleigh, Sept. 18—North Carolina cotton growers are being urged to wage a stiff battle against boll weevils this fall to prevent heavy infestations of the crop next year.
So widespread were the infestations this season that many of the weevils will survive the winter unless they are destroyed in the fall, said C. H. Brannon, extension entomologist at State College.

As soon as the cotton has been picked, he said, the growers should cut down all the stalks and plow them under.

Cutting the stalks deprives the weevils of their food, and plowing the stalks under will kill weevils which might otherwise survive the winter.

If the stalks are left to grow until frost, the weevils will approach winter in a healthy, vigorous condition, Brannon added, and they will be well able to withstand the cold weather.

An ounce of prevention is worth several pounds of cure, he declared, and the destruction of boll weevils in fall and winter is one of the best control methods known.

Furthermore, he added, the quicker that the stalks can be cut and plowed under, the better is the chance of destroying most of the weevils.
