Beam Speaks

budgeting which he urges is not to be treated lightly but calls for careful study. Using as an illustration a family of five with an income of $150.00 a month, he planned a budget showing how the father might finance a home, pay interest on money borrowed for the home, systematically decrease the principal, carry insurance to cover debt incurred in financing the home and to assure the children's education, meet the current needs of his family, and have something for emergencies "which are sure to come but which sane and sanitary living can reduce to almost nothing." Borrowing by a salaried man should be only for a home. For the merchant, planter, and so forth, who borrow money to increase profit, it becomes a different matter.

At some time in life the average man is apt to have a surplus that he wants to invest. "The first consideration," said Mr. Beam, "is soundness. There is no such thing as an absolutely safe investment but government bonds are generally so considering stocks of corporations, one must consider the management of the concern, the commodity, its saleability, likelihood of repeat sales, amount of income and so forth. The more solid the investment, the lower the income. The average person, experience has proven, is unable to distinguish between a good and bad investment. One's banker is glad to advise, give his reasons, and leave it to the individual to make his own decision."

"For the person so fortunate as to come into possession of money in a lump sum, the greater part is wisely invested in either government or state bonds, if the price is excessive as at present, the money may be deposited in a savings account and your banker is glad to be on the job for you to make the investment, as opportunity arises."

In closing, he discussed procedure to insure proper handling of our estates after we pass on.

Males Give Birth To Sea Horse Babes

Washington, Feb. 24—What is it that can look two ways at once, swims in the water, has a tail like a monkey, the shell of a beetle and the head of a horse, and reverses the ordinary way of nature by having the males give birth to the offspring the Smithsonian Institution asks. The answer is the hippocampus, popularly known as the "seahorse." Seahorses have received a systematic study at the institution from Isaac Ginsburg of the Bureau of Fisheries. He discovered several new species of this small, harmless fish.

WPA Women Workers And Carteret County

The following bulletin in reference to WPA women workers in District No. 1, which may be of interest to persons living in Carteret county has just been released by Lee Wallace, District Supervisor.

"The State WPA office has given District No. 1, headquarters at Williamston, a quota of 1,300 women who may be employed on WPA projects during the month of February. In order to prorate this number to the 24 counties in the District, we take the number of women certified in each county and find what percent age that is of the total number, 2,107, certified in the district. We then multiply 1,300 by that percentage which gives us a quota for each county. You will note that Carteret County's share of this 1,300 is 104 and there are at the present time 115 employed."

More Publicity For Driver J. W. Smith

J. W. Smith is the world's most publicized bus driver. His record until last November was 1,268,500 miles without an accident. The majority of these miles were driven under the wheel of a Seashore Transportation Company bus for genial Jim West of New Bern. In addition to wide publicity given Mr. Smith and his record through the Sunday papers of this state and the Associated Press last year, the famous Robert R. Ripley's daily cartoon read and viewed by people all over the world, in the current issue of Public Safety, a monthly magazine published by the National Safety Council, is

"Imagine how J. W. Smith of Beaufort, N. C. . . . felt last November when he beat his first fender in 17 years and shattered a no-accident record of 1,268,500 miles." The photo was captioned, "An Amazing Record."

Hatteras Sportsman Visits In Carteret

Tom Eaton who was lured to Hatteras for the Gulf Stream fishing a few years ago liked that locality so well that he left Winston Salem his home town to make his home in the island community. Recently he has spent much time in Carteret county where he did much quail hunting in the Newport area. On Wednesday he passed through Beaufort with Herman Carrow of Washington enroute to Atlantic where he paid Capt. Jim Morris a visit.

Mr. Eaton has done much for Hatteras since he went there. One of the greatest needs of this isolated community was an ice plant. Ice, which the fishermen used to pack their catches came from Manteo, about 60 miles away. Eaton fixed that situation by building an ice plant. Later he constructed a power plant for the community and most of the houses there are being wired at present. Later it is planned to extend lines to nearby communities such as Frisco, Buxton and Avon. Eaton also established a boat line from Hatteras to Engehard on the mainland in Hyde county. His associate in the Hatteras development venture is Frazier Peele, native of the island and the best Gulf Stream fishing guide along the North Carolina coast.
