HY DOES A BARBER'S POLE HAVE STRIPES?

L ONG ago, a barber served in two capacities—barber and surgeon. He "bled people"-i. e., when a man felt sick he thought he had too much blood in his system and he went to the barber to have some of that blood removed from his body. The barber pole stood for the staff the patient held as he was being bled. The red and white stripes were for the bandages used in the operation, the white for the bandage used before the operation, the red for the dressing of the wound after it was over. The gold ball at the top of the pole represented the other end of the business-the brass basin from which the customer was shaved.
