Legal Beer In N. C. Celebrates Eighth Birthday

Legal beer in North Carolina is eight years old.

Brought back by the state legislature on May 1, 1933, it has become one of North Carolina's biggest taxpayers, and an important factor in the state's business development.

The Brewers and North Carolina Beer Distributors Committee reports that North Carolina's beer industry in the eight years since re-legalization has:

Provided employment for 13,420 persons with an annual payroll of $11,928,500;

Contributed $8,149,104.76 in taxes to the state and the various cities, towns and counties of North Carolina;

Purchased thousands of dollars worth of trucks, refrigeration units, and other equipment;

Established a public spirited industry program of self-regulation to protect North Carolinians against abuses in the retail sale of beer.

The 1833 General Assembly re-legalized the sale of beer in legislation sponsored by Senator W. Roy Francis of Haywood county. The measure was ratified April 5, amended April 23, and legalized beer sales began on May 1, 1933. The measure was revised and incorporated in the permanent Revenue Act by the 1937 legislature.

Only $183,102.37 was collected in beer taxes by the state for the calendar year of 1933, the first year been permitted to be sold under the 1933 act. For the calendar year of 1940, the state collected $1,321,024.37; the counties $121,125; and, the cities and towns $25,000—a total of $1,467,149.37.

Railroad crossing accidents killed over 2,000 people in the United States last year.

NEWS and FACTS ... of Statewide Interest

The 8th Birthday of One of North Carolina's Biggest Taxpayers!

On May 1, 1933, beer was re-legalized in North Carolina. Since that time, it has paid taxes as follows:

To The State Treasury	$6,777,854.76
To North Carolina Counties	993,750.00
To Our Cities and Towns	377,500.00

This $8,149,104.76 total is in addition, of course, to federal taxes amounting to about $7,000,000. Thousands of new jobs have been created, moreover, bringing in a new stream of income and a revitalization of trade in North Carolina.

Social Benefits, Too

Important as well are the social results. The American brewing industry has promoted a vigilant campaign to protect the public against abuses in the retail sale of beer—a campaign to see that the reputation of the thousands of retailers operating legally and decently is not smeared by the relatively few who would use a beer license to shield illegal activities. In the past two years, for example, the North Carolina beer industry's "Clean Up or Close Up" program has resulted in the elimination of 155 undesirable outlets.

The brewing industry submits this record to you because it takes justifiable pride in it. Your support has made the achievements possible; your continued support will make results even more outstanding.
