Making a Farm Pay.

Washington Post.
Southern farmers cannot fail to find much of interest and profit in a recent Department of Agriculture publication. "A Profitable Cotton Farm," by C. L. Goodrich, one of the government's experts.

The farm in question is located in South Carolina, and in 1902, when its present owner to possession, it was in a deplorably bad condition, after having been under cultivation for about 80 years. Now it is fertile, well improved with fences and farm buildings, and is producing crops which yield the owner a handsome profit and a large income. All this has been accomplished by a deep and thorough cultivation of the soil, by the use of the barnyard manure and some commercial fertilizer, by rotation of crops and by the industry and good judgement of the farmer himself.

The farm is not an especially large one, containing only 132 acres, half of which are planted. The farmer divided his tilled land into three equal fields, on which he raises corn and cotton in succession. Before he took the farm it was producing on five to eight bushels of corn or about 300 pounds of seed cotton to the acre. The first year he made it produce 1 1/2 bales of cotton and 37 bushels of corn to the acre. Now his yields per acre are 2 1/2 bales of cotton, 85 bushels corn and 80 bushels of oats. He keeps about 24 head of native cattle, mainly for the sake of the manure, although they yield him a small profit besides.

A new flirtation makes a good "chaser" for an old love affair; it sort of takes the bitter taste out of your mouth.

Glenn Again.

Richmond News-Leader.

Governor Glenn, of North Carolina, must find the lecture business languishing and in need of advertisement, for he has worked his way back into the newspapers by the familiar plan of wholesale and violent denunciation of the morals and social conditions of communities. At a Chautauqua lecture in New York States the other night he declared that if he should undertake to tell the things he had seen in New York and Chicago, the men in the audience would tear him from the platform and trample him under foot; that the two cities were the chief disgraces of the country, and that if they did not amend their ways they would merit destruction.

We do not believe it all likely that the men in the audience before which the former governor was talking would have torn him from the platform and trampled him under foot in any circumstances, no matter what he might have said. They might have had him arrested for using bad language, but folks up that way usually are peaceful and law-abiding and not much given to tearing and trampling. And we have not much idea that New York and Chicago, or either, will be destroyed because of their wickedness. Such a measure would be rather drastic and difficult even for the most rigid North Carolina moralist under Governor Glenn's leadership to undertake; and the Supreme Authority promised that ten righteous in wicked cities might avert from them doom and extinction. Surely Chicago and New York each has more than that number of inhabitants who might pass muster even by Governor Glenn's standards. Also, we have no doubt that both in New York and Chicago many thousands of people living through years without seeing anything they could not describe on penalty of being torn from platforms and trampled. It is certain that the ordinary citizen may walk Broadway at all hours of the day or night without seeing anything to offend his sense of decency or to tempt him to crime. It is equal certain that people who go sniffing and prying about in search of filth will find it anywhere and every where on this globe where mankind has a dwelling place. The pure in heart are not frequently offended.

Violence, vituperation, general assaults on masses of people, and loose assertions rarely do any good. They may cause sensations and win advertisements, but they do not attract the confidence or command the cooperation of the judicious and thoughtful who faithfully endeavor to do something for the betterment of humanity.

Circumstantial Evidence.

Clyde was an inquisitive youngster whose propensity for getting into scrapes was matched only to his small sister's fertility of resources getting out of them. As a tribute to her cleverness he usually shifted the blame of his misdemeanors. One evening there was much excitement and fun among the older members of the family behind closed doors. Clyde, of course, was all curiosity. He battered the door, "he huffed and he puffed," and finally when the door was opened from inside the little man sprawled headlong into the room. Before making any attempt to get up he gasped out the usual, "It wathn't me; it wath Puthie." —The Delineator for October.

The first sure sign of real love in a man is when he stops flattering and begins to moralize.
