Less Dyspepsia Now—Here's The Reason.

The fact that there is less dyspepsia and indigestion in this community than there used to be is largely, we believe due to the extensive use of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, hundreds of packages of which we have sold. No wonder we have faith in them. No wonder we are willing to offer them to you for trial entirely at our risk.

Among other things, they contain Pepsin and Bismuth, two of the greatest digestive acids known to medical science. They soothe the inflamed stomach, ally pain, check heartburn and distress, help to digest the food, and tend to quickly restore the stomach to its natural comfortable healthy state.

There is no red tape about our guarantee. It means just what it says. We'll ask you no questions. Your word is enough for us. If Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets don't restore your stomach to health and make your digestion easy and comfortable, we want you to come back for your money. They are sold only at the 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. Three sizes, 25c, 50c and $1. Freeman Drug Co., Burlington, N. C.

Retired Georgia Planter's Advice to Kidney Sufferers.

Regarding the wonderful curative merits of your Swamp-Root, I cannot say too much. After suffering severely for three years or more with severe pains caused by weak kidneys, I was finally induced to try Swamp-Root through a testimonial I read in one of the newspapers. I was in such a condition that I was obliged to arise from my bed six or eight times every night. I purchased a fifty-cent bottle and before it was used I felt so much relief that I purchased a one-dollar bottle and by the time this was taken the old pains had left my back and I could sleep the whole night through. I am a retired planter, 70 years of age, and owing to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, I am in the best of health and feel like a boy. I am always glad to recommend Swamp-Root to those who are in need of it.

Sincerely yours,
C. E. USSERY,
Bowersville, Ga.

Personally appeared before me, this 8th day of September, 1909, C. E. USSERY, who subscribed and above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact.

Too Much Coddling Kills Many Chickens.
New York, March 7.—It is probably a fact that thousands of chicks are annually coddled to death—killed with kindness, as it were—so careful are some of us to protect them from the chilling winds of early spring, that one denies them even the fresh air, that is so beneficial to their health and so necessary to their growth and development, says the Philadelphia Record.

Poultry raisers are gradually awakening to the value and importance of good, fresh air, and on many poultry house with ample and scientific ventilation, instead of the close, ill-smelling, disease-breeding house so common a few years ago. In consequence of this change in housing one finds healthy, productive, profitable flocks singing all day long—contented and happy—shelling out the hen fruit and causing their owners to rejoice. The medicine chests containing the potions, lotions and nostrums that a few years ago was considered an important adjunct to every well-regulated poultry plant has been set away in the corner and is now covered with dust and cobwebs. The introduction of fresh air, and plenty of it, has put the medicine chest out of business, except in cases of accidents, which are rare on well-managed poultry farms. We have learned—against our will, perhaps—that fresh air is good for the old fowls, and they must have it to do their best, and one is gradually learning that it is a necessity with the young chicks.

Newly hatched chicks should, of course, not be subjected to the cold, but they should and must have good ventilation, fresh air. After they are three or four weeks old the more they are out of doors the better, even if the weather is yet comparatively cold, provided, of course, they have warm quarters, an outdoor brooder, a brooder house or a mother hen to which they can go at will to get warmed up. It is a wonder that some chicks survive at all, hatched as they often are in poorly ventilated cellars that have been closed up all winter and that are filled with poisonous gases and foul air, which when drawn into the lungs of the chick cannot do otherwise than poison its entire system and handicap nature in her effort to make a strong healthy chick out of the little creature. It is then placed in a brooder that is oftentimes practically air-tight, and compelled to breathe foul air, made more foul and unhealthy by the fumes of an oil lamp that has not been thoroughly cleaned since used a year ago. It's a wonder they live at all. We don't blame them for dying. Even when other conditions are propitious, the air of the incubator room sweet and pure, and the brooder and brooder lamp clean, the chicks need plenty of good, pure fresh air, and if they are deprived of it they will surely suffer, and sickness and death will result, or if not they will never attain the size and vigor that can be obtained by proper breeding.

Chicks raised like hothouse plants are generally so tender and so lacking in stamina and vigor that when the time comes when they must battle with conditions as they exist in nature they are poorly equipped, and if they do not succumb at once simply linger along, undecided whether to live or die, and never amount to much. Vigor is the keynote to the whole situation, and the way to obtain it in the flock is to first breed it in as far as possible and then augment it by compelling the chicks in a sense to rough it. As soon as they are old enough let the survival of the fittest be one's motto. If necessary, sacrifice a few of the weaklings, even 50 per cent. of one's flock, in order to breed up a vigorous strain of birds. For the first few days after a chick is hatched its principal need is warmth and fresh air, not cold, but fresh and pure. Air does not necessarily have to be cold to be pure if the ventilation and circulation in the brooder and brooder house are right. The day-old chick, hovered by a hen, realizes its need of both warmth, and fresh air, and, while it hesitates to leave the warm hover of the mother hen it will poke its little head out and breathe its lungs full of the air that is so essential to its well being. This is one reason why some have better success raising chicks with hens than in brooders, simply because they do not see to it that the chicks in the brooders obtain a sufficient supply of fresh air, while those raised with hens can help themselves.

Poultry raisers should strive to breed vigor into their flocks. It is a reflection upon the intelligence and judgment of man to be compelled to admit that less than 50 per cent. of his chicks that are hatched ever reach maturity and, to go a little further back, that less than 80 per cent.—probably not more than 70 per cent. of the eggs that are set, produce living chicks. We do not find the same conditions in nature. The wild fowl, the prairie chicken, the quail, the grouse, etc., will bring forth a chick from every egg incubated and will raise every chick to maturity—unless they happen to fall prey to hawks or wild animals. The young of these birds are always healthy and hardy and vigorous, and instead of standing about on one foot and wishing they were dead they get out and hustle from sunrise to sunset, wading through wet grass and enduring hardships that would put the chicks of our domesticated fowl out of business in short order and send them to that haven whence they never return.

Why shouldn't it be possible to have our domesticated fowl as hardy and vigorous as the wild fowl? It is possible, and the old reason that they are not so hardy is because man, wise in his own conceit, has got away from nature, and in trying to improve on her way of doing things has by a series of retrogressive methods and experiments, produced strains of fowls that are lacking in the essentials that make for vigor and perfect health. Let us get back to nature. Let the poultry raiser get vigor and stamina in their flocks. Let them get the fowl's veins filled with good, rich blood. Sacrifice weaklings. Nature will do her part. The fittest will survive, and in a few years we will have flocks as healthy and hardy and vigorous as any of the wild birds that grace our plains and prairies.

Desiderium.

Face in the tomb, that lies so still,
May I draw near,
And watch you sleep and love you,
Without word or tear?

You smile, your eyelids flicker;
Shall I tell!
How the world goes that lost you?
Shall I tell?

Ah, love, lift not your eyelids;
'Tis the same
Old story that we laughed at,
Still the same.
We knew it, you and I.

We knew it, you and I,
We knew it all:
Still is the small the great,
The great the small.

Still the cold lie quenches
The flaming truth,
And still embattled age
Wars against youth.

Yet I believe still in the ever-living
God
That fills your grave with perfume,
Writing your name in violets across
The sod,

Shielding holy lovely face from
Snow and bloom;
And though the withered stay the lovely go.

No transitory wrong or wrath of things
Shatter the faith—that each slow minute brings

That meadow nearer to us where your feet
Shall flutter near we like white butterflies—

That meadow where immortal lovers
meet,
Gazing forever in immortal eyes.
—Theud.

Watchful Waiting.
"That young man has been calling here a long time," said Farmer Corn-tassel.
"Yes," replied his daughter.
"An' he hasn't proposed yet?"
"No."
"Well, I suppose this watchful waiting policy is all right, but it is kind o' trying on the patience."—Washington-Star.

Saving Cigars.
"We must economize, if we are to be married soon, George" said the sweet young "thing."
"I know it, dear," replied her companion on the sofa, as he moved up closer.
"Are you trying to save on your cigars, dear?"
"Oh, yes, don't you see, I just took those two cigars out of my vest pocket, and placed them on the mantel-piece?"
And then his arms began to get busy.—Judge.

"You say you are educating your boy for a theatrical career?"
"Yes."
"An actor or a producer?"
"No, I want him to become prosperous as well as prominent. I am going to make a ticket speculator of him."—Washington-Star.
