BOB JONES COMMENTS ON HERE AND HEREAFTER.

"I am an evolutionist, but I believe the Bible." That is what a man said to the writer one time. This man thought he was telling the truth, but he wasn't. No man can be an evolutionist and believe even the first verse of the Bible. The Bible begins with this statement, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." The word "created" here is a Hebrew word which means "made out of nothing." There are two Hebrew words used for "create" in the first chapter of Genesis. One means to form out of something which has already been created. The word which is used in the first verse about the heavens and the earth. The same word is used about the creation of animals and the same word is used again when it says "God created man in His own image."

In the second verse of the first chapter of Genesis, we read "and the earth was without form and void." This should be rendered "the earth became waste and desolate." God did not create the earth waste and desolate. We learn this from one or two other passages of scripture. God created out of nothing a perfect heaven and a perfect earth. Something happened to the earth. There was a cataclysm which probably had to do with the fall of angels. But remember, originally the earth was perfect. It became waste and desolate. The earth was inhabited before it became waste and desolate. God commanded Adam to replenish the earth. It is the opinion of the writer that all of these fossils are the bones of animals which possibly were on this earth before the earth became waste and desolate. When the curse came these animals were destroyed. There was an awful smash. After this wreck of the earth, God took charge of the chaotic world and brought order out of chaos. He made the earth habitable for men. Please remember that the earth is not perfect now but it is habitable. "All creation groans and travails in pain." Paul says it is waiting for redemption. Some day this earth will be restored to the perfection which it had before it became waste and desolate. It used to be said that the only things certain in life were death and taxes. Now the order has been reversed. Taxes come first.
