The greatest event which has happened Concerning our monetary system, I would imply make a suggestion or two. We boast that we have passed beyond the barbarous system of barter in which the Eskimos and other rude races still re main This is a mistake. The whole monetary system of the civilized world is still based on the barter of two metals-gold and silver-which have come down to us as precious metals from prehistoric times, in which they were sacred metals, dedicated to the worship of the sun and moon. When England ships gold to the United States, or vice versa, the nation simply repeats the the coast nearest to the parent source; then "swapping" of that metal for commodities which the Phoenicians carried on along the Mediterranean coasts 5,000 years ago, or which Columbus practiced 400 years ago with the Indians of Central America. The use of gold and silver as the basis of the world's commerce is not, therefore, the result of the wise selection of a congress of highly civilized nations, but simply the per Shakespeare's equal simply as a writer of petuation into the cultured present of a barbarous clistom drawn from the remote past. And the money classes of the world are now trying to discontinue the use of one of these prehistoric mediums of exchange and rest the whole business of a rapidly ex panding civilization upon a metal of which there is in the world about enough to form a cube 24 feet square, and which is being ab sorbed in the arts in Europe alone at the well as heard. Music and the Drama in 1993. By the time that the scroll bearing the legend "A. D. 1993" shall have been unfurled the popular taste will demand in the drama much of the same material which served to delight our grandparents half a century ago In other words, Shakespeare will be on top, and the nondescript fever and ague concoctions of the present day, called for want of a better name "musational melodrama," will have passed away, together with the incongruous mixture of vandeville, farce and negro minstrelsy now known as farce comedy.

It is not to be supposed, however, that one class of entertainment will suffice for our great-grandchlidren. While most of them will incline to the strictly legitimate, there will still be many who will want a different sort of amusement. The tastes of these people will be supplied by American dramas, with the comedy and tragic elements both strong. These plays will in a great measure deal with the peculiarities of life in different sections of the country and will be faithful pictures, for they will be written by residents of the various localities. A gentleman said to us a few days ago "does it not seem that the capitalist of this country already have enough wealth to satisfy them? They have more money than they can use. Does it not seem that they would be happier to stop money getting, and enjoy what they have ?" It is not the greed for more money so much, as the thirsting for more power. Money means power. The 31,000 men who now own over half of the wealth of this great rich nation, with 66,000,000 of people, and 66,000 millions of dollars of 'property, have as much wealth as they want for their enjoyment and profit. But their desire now is, to get the masses of the people so poor that they can be easily controlled. They want to get the majority of the people in debt to them, so that they can make them slaves. They want to make the people suffer enough poverty to rob them of their manhood. Then they can force the people to vote their way, or else they will have the votes counted the way they desire, without any fear it will be resented. They want to get the inconvenient multitude under servile control; then they will have a perpetual lease of power. Freemen awake to the danger! Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty!
