The Tariff Bill Passes the Senate by Ten Majority.

PROSPERITY OR DEFEAT IN 1900.

Senators Teller and Butler's Explanation for Refraining from Voting—Bill Goes to Conference—Expected Assurances About Other Matters.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 12.—On last Wednesday, the 7th after a debate lasting over two weeks, a debate in which the old, time-worn arguments of "a tariff for protection" and "a tariff for revenue" were again advanced, ventilated, and re-breathed, the Senate by a vote of thirty-eight majority passed the Republican "prosperity measure" to provide revenue for the government and to encourage the industries of the United States. It now remains for the conference committees of the two Houses to adjust the existing differences between the bill as it comes from the Senate and the bill as it now is with the amendments, and then, with the President's signature will be placed upon the statute books.

The fight just ended over this bill differs from the previous fights over it in that the issue is in that the vote on certain of its provisions indicated a breaking up of parties and a partial abandonment on the part of some Democrats and Republicans of the rock-ribbed and hide-bound doctrine of "revenue" and "protection" which have for so many years held together and maintained intact the separate organizations of the two parties. During the discussion of the bill Republicans who have spent years of service in contending for the protective principle appeared to indicate that they would vote in support of a tariff for revenue.

The adoption on Monday of the Lodge amendment to place a tax on the bonds and interest on the bonds was agreed to without even the formality of a yeas and nays vote. Senator Spooner's amendment creating a commission to inquire into the sugar bounty took up the better part of the day. The House on the other hand, on Tuesday the 10th, a proposition was indulged in by Senators Allen and Thurston of Nebraska, into which a great deal of Nebraska politics was injected.

Mr. President, I have on so many occasions declared my self a protectionist, and that it is not only my duty to do so, but that I am here to protect my vote, and therefore I am not one of those who believe that it will restore confidence or in anywise affect the existing depression.

Some of the things which have been done to draw attention from the financial and monetary questions—the real issues—I should cast my vote against the bill.

THE ASHEVILLE GAZETTE learns that George W. Vanderbilt is to erect a great charity and pay hospital within one mile of Asheville. The idea in establishing this hospital, which in many of its features will rank with the best in this country, is to furnish a place where all sick people, without regard to their financial means, social position or religious opinions may receive the best medical attention.

WASHINGTON POST.—The following is a hot charge into the Republican side of the Senate yesterday. "When this trust protecting bill is passed," he said, "all the trusts in the country ought to give a receipt in full to the chairman of the National Republican Committee."

NEW YORK MURDER MYSTERY.

Was Lured to Woodside by Mrs. Mack. Was Killed by Thora, Who Was Held in a Closet.—The Body Cut Up in Mack's Parlor.

NEW YORK, July 7.—There is no longer a mystery about the tragedy which first came to the public knowledge on June 26, when some boys playing on the pier at the foot of East Eleventh street discovered floating in the water a river bundle which contained a portion of human body.

THORA'S CONVICTION. According to his confession, the murder of Mrs. Mack was committed on Friday, June 26, in the house at Woodside, N. Y., which had been rented by Mrs. Mack on Monday, the 24th. Thora went early to the house and hid in a closet.

THE VICTIM ARRIVES. It was between 10 and 11 o'clock in the morning when Mrs. Mack and her victim, Guldensuppe, drove up in the surrey. Thora heard Mrs. Mack ask Guldensuppe a few questions about the house and heard Guldensuppe answer.

OPENS THE FATAL CLOSET. Thora, concealed behind the door of the closet, heard Guldensuppe's steps on the stairs as he complied with the woman's request. Carelessly Guldensuppe opened the door after which she came to the closet where Thora stood.

CUTS UP THE DEAD BODY. All this conversation and much more in this alleged confession of Mrs. Mack obeyed Thora's injunction and the murderer returned to the bath tub. He cut off the head of the dead body which lay on the floor with a pocket knife.

CONTRADICTORY STATEMENT. Acting Inspector O'Brien is quoted as saying that Thora has made a statement in which he positively denies that she killed Guldensuppe or knows who did it.

"What boy Jim Weatherall is a trump. He has got more horse sense in a month than I have in a year!" Anne looked up in astonishment.

"I don't know where he got it from," she said. "I've never seen him since he was over every day. He soon convinced me the mare was shod wrong, and that the boy Bratus knew nothing about his business."

"You're right," she said. "I never saw him since he was over every day. He soon convinced me the mare was shod wrong, and that the boy Bratus knew nothing about his business."
