she even appeared to avoid him and he turned to his work with a sigh. One evening he watched them going away together and he noticed what a handsome, clean-limbed young fellow the shipping clerk was and how daintily Miss Dolly lifted her skirts, and what a handsome couple they made, and he turned away to the little mirror and scrutinized with sarnest eyes the face that greeted him there. He noted bitterly the gray sprinkled in work he would not go back, no; not if it brought the keenest torture into his life. He had deliberately brought it upon himself and must bear the consequences. And if Miss Dolly loved the shipping clerk, why, she must have him-her happiness came first of all. So he crushed his heart sternly and bore the anguish as silently as he could. But it was hard, hard work as the days went by. Miss Dolly has grown gay again, sometimes it seemed almost a feverish gayety, she was so bright an I restless. The bookkeeper caught himself watching her and was astonished to remember how long he hal unconsciously been doing so. Ouce he came upon them standing close together and the shipping clerk

An Ancient House Destroyed.

During a heavy storm, lightning struck the residence of Judge C. W. Carter, of Preston, near Norwich, and it was burned to the ground.

The house was built in 1962 and was the oldest dwelling in Preston and one of the oldest in Connecticut. It was built as a home for the herdsman of several of the early settlers of Norwich and finally passed into the possession of the Palmers, from whom it descended to Judge Carter. The house was very substantially built, having an oak frame and floors, and has had five additions made to it. The dining room was finished in seven kinds of hard wood. Judge and Mrs. Carter had a very large and valuable collection of old chins, much of which was lost. A dinner set made in 1300, the pieces forming a chariot wheel, was saved, Lut one piece was broken .- |
