An English writer says that we no longer produce remarkably gifted men because our average intellectual power has vastly increased. Fifty years ago our statesmen, poets and orators loomed up among the first of the world. Where are they now? The intellectual average has risen to such a height that the genius of half a century ago would now seem commonplace.

To the Boys.
Aim high, my boy, and strive to be a man. The heights where heroes stand, Whose purposes were all sublime and aspirations grand.

The Early Mothers.
From what I know of the duties and toils of women 65 years ago, they were entitled to a great deal of credit, but possibly less than were their grandmothers in the earlier periods of the history of the colonies. I can well remember when the wives of the age performed a vast amount of hard work in the home and in the field, besides much in the domestic arrangements, such as bringing the water and wood (if not in preparing it), feeding the swine, poultry and cattle, perhaps riding in getting in the hay, if a shower was imminent, particularly in the fall.

Dividing the Camels.
A Persian died, leaving seventeen camels to be divided among his three sons in the following proportions; the eldest to have half, the second a third, and the youngest a sixth. Of course camels could not be divided into fractions, so in despair the brothers submitted their difficulty to Mohammed Ali.
