NORRIS' TRIBUTE TO BRYAN.

A District Man's Estimate of the Boy Orator of the Platte.

From the Tenny Times.
The article herewith reproduced is from the H. N. James L. Norris, of Washington, D. C. Mr. Norris was the national committee man of the District of Columbia, who aided materially in making William Jennings Bryan the Democratic candidate for President. Mr. Norris has been for years a member and Treasurer of the Democratic Congressional Committee. He is President of the famous Jackson Democratic Association of the District of Columbia, which, next to Timpany is one of the oldest Democratic and patriotic organizations in the United States.

"You request of me the discharge of a pleasant duty. My only regret is that I am not equal to the subject."
"As a resident of the National Capital, I necessarily observe, at all times, the distinguished members of both Houses of Congress.

"William J. Jennings Bryan, early in his career, secured the approbation of all the members of the lower House of Congress by his renowned maiden speech upon the tariff. It was his introduction to the National Legislature and to the country at large. This speech was pronounced by a distinguished member of the Senate as well as ablest of parliamentary orators, the equal in force of reasoning, in beauty of rhetoric, in felicity of illustration, and logical deduction to any speech delivered in the House of Representatives during his own service of many terms.

"I have known Mr. Bryan personally for many years. He is not only handsome in person, but has that invaluable gift which is characterized by Lord Chesterfield as a perpetual letter of introduction, a pleasing address.

"The result at Chicago was no mere matter of chance. It was the student's victory, for Mr. Bryan is one of the few men in public life who has cultivated the arts of oratory and the graces of rhetoric. It was the ripe student with a wealth of chosen words gathered and garnered through many industrious years. I speak that which I do know when I say that the gifted orator of the Northwest left Congress without the slightest stain of a student's impetuosity. A man of the noblest impulses, he advocated and assisted in the passage of legislation which was a pure one, did not approve. His place upon the most important committee of the House of Representatives, had been mercenary would have enabled him to have left Congress rich not poor as he did.

"It has been said 'old men for counsel, young men for action', but a well-disciplined youth devoted to high aim, employing studies hours as the case of Mr. Bryan, as the country will find and the world will know, if he be excited to the high office for which he has been nominated, unites the wisdom of age with the vigor of youth.

"William Jennings Bryan, with an acuteness that is a gift of nature, had scarcely entered professional life and come in contact with the public, when he realized that existing conditions crushed the humble whilst they exalted the strong, made the poor poorer and the rich richer, not a pulsation of his heart but his beat in sympathy with the oppressed. Not a word had he ever fallen from his lips that were not words of cheer to the distressed.

"His polar star of the wandering planets of error, has been the strengthening and elevation of the lowly without encroaching upon the rights of the wealthy, the protection of the producer against plutocracy in whatever form plutocracy appears by syndicate, trust, or otherwise. I can well say that the whole life of our candidate for the Presidency, has been devoted to the strengthening of labor, which is the enlightenment of labor, which is the only course, safe, and lasting foundation of free government.

"The awakening of the giant shakes the earth, the Giant of the West has aroused himself. He is striding eastward with the 'Boy Orator of the Platte' on his shoulders, and will place him in the Executive Mansion, not by violence, not by force, but.

By that weapon sure set, And firmer than the bayonet, That falls like snowflakes on the sod, And executes the Freeman's will, As lightning does the will of God. —The Freeman's Ballot.
"The ensuing campaign, in favor of the candidates nominated at Chicago by the late Democratic Convention, will prove to the inspiring of a nation, that the Republican wrong of 1873, when the Republican party in defiance of the lessons of history, the experience of years, and of sound financial policy, destroyed the then existing relations between gold and silver, the twin metals of the Constitution, by deceptive legislation. —"JAMES L. NORRIS."

Democracy's Call For Money.

Washington Post.

We gather from Hon. James K. Jones' address to the people of the country that the Democratic National Committee is in need of funds. Chairman Jones was perhaps in a hurry, he prepared it, for the expediency of dislocation and incoherence are two obvious to be mistaken. Still, we think it safe to assume that the campaign treasury is not at present threatened with a surplus.

It was to have been expected that the Democratic party would lack money in its campaign. In adopting the free coinage plank of the Chicago platform, the organization abandoned almost every source of supply from which it has hitherto derived its material war. The bankers, the capitalist, the brokers, the speculators, the big financial and industrial corporations, have all withdrawn their countenance and arrayed themselves either directly or indirectly under the banner of a movement which has for its object the triumph of McKinley over Bryan. Nearly every powerful newspaper in every large city is engaged in the same enterprise. The Republican committee has all the money it wants for the preparation and for the employment of professional speakers in every nook and corner of the land. We assume that the Democratic leaders anticipated this result when they set up the silver issue and chose Mr. Bryan as their standard bearer. They must have known that under such circumstances they could no longer depend upon the millionaires of the East or upon the great moneyed institutions of any section. They have appealed, therefore, to the masses, to the common people among whom their strength is to be found, and we suppose that they look confidently for a prompt and satisfactory response.

Unquestionably no national campaign can be successfully conducted in this part of the world without money. We do not refer to the money for purposes of bribery and corruption, but to money for perfectly proper and legitimate uses. We shall soon see, therefore, whether the Democratic Masses that have been so noisily clamoring for the free silver issue are sincere in their professions of devotion to that cause. They can easily equip Mr. Jones' committee with the necessary means of conducting a vigorous and intelligent contest, and there is no great difficulty in extracting the rhetorical mazes of Mr. Jones' address the fact that those means are readily at hand. The events of the next two or three weeks will tell us whether the advocates of silver believe in themselves or in their cause.

Woman's Rights.
In a recently published medical work, the author asserts that ninetenths of the women of America are subject to uterine and kindred diseases and in consequence, maternity becomes to them a dreaded burden. How very small is the proportion of ladies who reach middle age wearing the bright glow of health which was their maidenly attire, and of which they have been robbed by functional disorders and nervous weakness! We take pleasure in recommending to any lady who is afflicted with these troubles, the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, tried, remedied, safe and sure in all cases. Its discoverer merits the gratitude of the sex for the blessing he has conferred upon them. For nursing mothers and all delicate "run-down" women it is the most certain restorative. To those who wish to become mothers it is a priceless boon. It lessens the pains and perils of child-birth, shortens labor, promotes the secretion of an abundance of nourishment for the child and shortens the period of confinement.

What Butler Says.
Washington Post.
Senator Butler, chairman of the Populist Committee, says that he has been receiving some very favorable reports from different States where there have been disagreements between the Populists and Democrats in fashion on the floor. It is now believed that the offer of the Populists in Texas to take seven of the fifteen electors will be accepted. In West Virginia the committees have about agreed upon a division, giving the Democrats four and the Populists two electors. It is also stated that the chances of fusion in North Carolina have improved.

It was stated at Populist headquarters that they believed the Idaho fusion would be arranged so as to give the silver Republicans a share of the offices and an equal interest in the campaign, the electors to be divided among the three parties. The National Populist Committee, it was stated, will insist upon this and will be joined in it by the Democratic National Committee.

A Little Short on Memory.
One day the Professor noticed his wife placing a large bouquet on his desk.

"What does that mean?" he asked.
"Way!" she exclaimed, "don't you know that this is the anniversary of your marriage?"
"Ah, indeed, it is?" said the Professor, politely. "Kindly let me know when yours comes around and I will endeavor to reciprocate the favor!" —"Youth's Companion."

MEXICO AND SILVER.

NEW YORK BROKER'S PUNGENT EXPOSURE OF FALLA'IS.

The Stupidity of Comparing Mexican and American Prices of American Articles Mexicans Hardly Use. Some Solid Information.
Jan. 1896 Weekly Market Letter.
So much has been said and written in ignorance upon the matter of prices and conditions in Mexico, that we have gone to consider a trouble to present this matter in its true light to our readers. The writer himself has spent considerable time in that country, and can vouch for the absolute correctness of the letters below submitted which he has received on this subject:

"I have traveled a good deal in Mexico, and yet to see the time which the people would take an American silver dollar. United States notes, no matter if they are silver ones, are always at a premium, but they do not want the silver dollar itself. Regarding the labor question, it seems very strange that we are constantly receiving applications from the United States for positions at this place. We now have employed 32 Americans and they all seem to be well satisfied with Mexico. Hardly a week passes without we have an American laborer stop over here looking for a job. Take the number of Americans employed on our railroads, and then ask yourself, why do they come to Mexico? Nearly all of our white men at the end of the month have a credit balance, which shows conclusively that living is cheap, which enables them to save. I have just taken a look at our books, and I find that on the first of the month the amount we have on deposit, which represents the men's savings, was $19,232.35.

"Mexican labor, it is true is cheaper than our labor at home, but the conditions here are very different from the conditions at home, and I doubt very much if you could find anywhere a happier set of people than those we have here."

Another letter bearing upon the same point is as follows:
"While the Peon labor is very cheap in Mexico, merchants as a usual thing find good employment at even a higher wage than at home. I find myself that there is no difficulty at all in getting men to go from this country to Mexico, and they certainly would not do so unless they were bettering themselves. You have been in Mexico yourself and you can testify as to the number of Americans employed daily on all the railroads. All the contractors who I have met in that country are Americans. Nearly all the station agents are Americans, and you will find nothing but American Englishmen in the general offices of the companies. In the City of Mexico there is quite an American colony and besides there are a great many Germans employed there. On my last trip through Mexico, one of the conductors on the road told me that he had met a party a few days before who had been to Mexico to look up the labor question, and stated that he had examined into the matter that he had come to the conclusion that any laborer to American laborers offered an insult to the latter."

In a private letter written from Mexico City on July 25th, 1895, we find the following:
"You know I am not a partisan of either metal, but down here I must say that gold is a pretty small figure, and the people are all well. A question looks very different when viewed from the standpoint of the other end of the line.
I have become pretty well satisfied from what I have seen here that the true prosperity of a country does not depend upon the amount of money it can borrow abroad, but rather upon the amount of money in the hands and owned by the citizens of the country. Here a Mexican silver dollar buys a dollar's worth of everything, but a gold dollar, which is a comparative thing and depend largely upon the purchasing power of the money. In Mexico the purchasing power of a silver dollar.

We do not wish these letters to be partisan, we do wish the conditions which prevail at the present time and have a bearing upon the great interests as they are, and we shall soon continue to present them and we are always ready to back our statements by proof. Some of our friends have made the criticism that our letters should not deal so much with politics, but should offer advice as to investment we consider that every man who has money to invest should be a careful student of the conditions which now surround us. It is well enough to say we must keep up the gold standard, but the question is, How are we going to do so? Our solution would be to open our very abundant gold fields with American capital, so that the gold would stay here. An other safe place to invest money is in Mexico. We now have before us several enterprises of decided merit. Investments made in Mexico are made on the basis of the Mexican dollar and are very large profits are to be made by investment in Mexico in industrial enterprises.

Youth and Greatness

A great deal has been said about the youthfulness of W. J. Bryan. One of the titles by which he is designated is "The Boy Orator of the Platte." While he is young, compared with others who have been nominated for the same high office, yet thirty-six years is not such a youthful age. It is three years beyond what is stipulated in the average life of man. It is true we look to age for statesmanship, yet men who have shown they have mastered the craft of the statesman, while still young in years, are not a rarity by any means. Alexander Hamilton is, possibly, the most notable instance of this in our country. He was only seventeen years of age when he made an address in reference to the election of delegates to the Continental Congress which attracted attention. He was but thirteen years old when he published a pamphlet in reply to an attack made upon Congress by Samuel Seabury, which displayed such ability that it was credited to John Jay. At twenty-five he was a member of Congress, and before he was thirty he was engaged upon the work that led to the formation of the constitution.

William Pitt, the second, and Charles James Fox are the two Englishmen who stand forth most prominently as filling great positions while young in years. Mr. Pitt at twenty-one was a member of Parliament. Two years after, because of his ability and eloquence, he was made Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one year later, when Ministry resigned, he was urged by the King to accept the primership. He declined, but accepted it two years later, and at twenty-five was the most popular and powerful Minister of the age.

Mr. Fox was elected to Parliament before he had attained his majority, and was just of age when he was made Junior Lord of the Admiralty.

The youngest Cabinet officer in the United States was Samuel L. Southard, of New Jersey. He was only twenty-nine years of age when he was called to succeed Smith Thompson as Secretary of the Navy in the Cabinet of President Monroe. He is an instance of how brief a thing is fame, or rather how near one can come to being made famous and yet not attain it. Half of the present generation possibly never heard of Mr. Southard, yet he was within one of becoming president of the United States. When Gen. William Henry Harrison was nominated for the Presidency, the second place on the ticket was offered to Mr. Southard but he declined it. The position was subsequently given to Mr. Tyler, who on the death of Gen. Harrison, succeeded him in the White House.

War is attractive to the spirit and daring of youth, and it is not surprising to find some of the bravest soldiers young in years. The Virginia Colonel, George Washington, was only twenty-three when he covered the retreat of the reckless Braddock, and displayed those traits of character that made him the first American when the colorless sought to achieve their independence. Napoleon Bonaparte at twenty-five was a brigadier general of artillery. In the late civil war we find young men prominently at the front. When the war closed George A. Custer was not more than twenty-four years of age, yet he won the stars of a Major General. Gen. Judson Kilpatrick, the dashing cavalryman, who after the war was the first American when the colorless sought to achieve their independence. It is useful for the New York papers to try to show that prices are high in Mexico and wages low, for if prices were high and wages low, how could these people live and be so happy and contented as they are.
The same labor gets quite as good pay in Mexico as it does here, the skill of the laborer, as it does everywhere else. It must be remembered that after all, wages are a comparative thing and depend largely upon the purchasing power of the money. In Mexico the purchasing power of a silver dollar.

Curse and Swearing.

Did you ever think for a moment why people curse and swear? If you have I am sure you have quit it yourself. Now let us consider the professional cursers. Men who have become experts at the business.

The most ready and most expert and most willing man to curse and swear that the writer has had the misfortune to come in contact with is a negro man. He is a good hand on the farm. He never went to school a day in his life and cannot read or write. In fact he is a grossly ignorant man. His stock of words is small except in slang and oaths. His mind, body and soul are full of terms. I never have seen but one person that could touch him and that was a white woman of low degree. The main trouble with her was the lack of pure and decent words to give vent to her wrath. Naturally the woman was sharp. She had good horse sense and by nature she was a great talker. She had acquired the habit of cursing while young and that was the only language in which she could express her joy or relieve her heated temper. Now take these two examples and compare them to some pure, good, moral, man or woman of any color. The pure, good, moral man or woman has a full supply of pure, decent, pleasant words. He can tell any story and tell it well with the words that he brought from his mother's knee. He may be a man that talks continuously but that makes no difference he does not have to employ others to do it with.

Some boys begin to swear at the age when it seems a great accomplishment. But in later years when he looks around him and sees that the man or woman who can swear most bitterly and who can wind him up in a minute or a few minutes in life then he feels ashamed of the dirty habit. He sees and feels the effect of it. He looks and sees some boy who can talk to a thousand men and never utter an oath and an expert swearer turns back on him and he is bitterly ashamed. Men and women love to be first at anything they undertake. So when a boy of a high-toned, christian family begins to curse because he thinks it is smart, sees how for he is excelled by some low, grovelling, fellow, he repents and ceases to curse.

There is nothing in swearing that makes a man large. Far from it; it makes him smaller than the sorry man who passes as a professional. Some men curse because they think it gives emphasis to his utterance; far from it. It disgraces the man who is a swearer and course it effects the man who does not curse even more than it does the swearer. Who does it please? No one. When a boy breaks out with his first oath at once he becomes ashamed and looks around to see if anybody is looking at him. But step by step he gets more and more bold and soon he has acquired the filthy habit. How hard it is to quit. How unbecoming it is to continue. How deep it goes to your parents' hearts! They would rather see you drink.

I say then that it is neither smart, decent, nor does it give emphasis to swear. Boys, think what good there is in it. It soon spoils your pure and sweet English learned at that devoted mother's knee. So quit it for her sake.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

A cream of tartar baking powder. Lightest of all in leavening strength. Latest United States Government Food Report. ROYAL BAKING POWDER COMPANY, New York.

In general literature youthful writers are so common as to scarcely cause comment. Charles Dickens wrote the "Pickwick Papers" before he was twenty-five. Bryant penned "Thanatopsis" when he was eighteen. Byron was only twenty-one when "Childe Harold" was given to the world. Balwer Lytton, Bayard Taylor, and the poet Keats were all major contributors by the time they were eighteen. Fitz Green Halleck, Homer Kille White, Thomas Moore, Schiller, Southey, Colver, Leigh Hunt, all were satirists, before they had reached their majority. Campbell wrote the "Pleasures of Hope" when he was twenty-two, and Will Carleton was two years older when he published "Betsy and I Are Out"—not a great poem by any means, yet by its homeliness and pathos it captured the American heart, and has commanded him a hearing ever since.—Washington Post.
