POETRY

It is the gift of Poetry to hallow every place in which it moves; to breathe round Nature an odor more exquisite than the perfume of the rose, and to shed over it a tint more magical than the blush of morning.

THE BALLAD OF A BAKER

Joe Brown he was a baker-man, A baker-man was Joe; He never was known to want for aught, And yet he kneaded dough.

And he was rugged, hearty, too, And had a long life leaved, And all because he rose up with His early rising year.

To never cheat his customers This man was early taught; And yet his loaves were always light, And his pie-crust rather short.

And he was gen'rous hearted, too, And kind unto the needy, And neat and tasty in his dress, Although his cakes were soady.

With him none dared to bandy jokes, When'er he sought the mart; For well they knew his repartees Were sharper than his tart.

And while I say his skill was great In getting up a muffin, His pastry filled the mouths of all, And needs no further puffin'.

'Tis said he was a temp'rance man; If so, I can't tell why He mixed with wheat and cornmeal, too, A trifle of the rye!

When age at last o'ertook the man, His frame grew weak and sore, And, like the cake he used to bake, His head was frosted o'er.

And when he died all mourned his loss, With no sectarian bias; For he had been a friend to all, A good man and a pie-ous.

MISCELLANEOUS

Beneath this crust of upheaved earth A well-bred baker lies; And, like the rolls he used to mould, We hope at last he'll rise.
