has there been so much water used on them, and to many who have given it much consideration, this seems a useless expense as well as a dangerous practice. With the same amount of water used daily, these streets could be washed thoroughly once or twice a week, and would be clean, dry and safe and a credit to the city.

I feel sure that the sentiment expressed in these lines will meet the sanction of every automobilist, motorcyclist and bicyclist in the city, to say nothing of the pedestrians, who, on a beautiful day are compelled to wade through the mud to cross the street. If these things are true, surely it is not asking too much of the city fathers to investigate this matter at once and put a stop to the practice.
