GREAT ESTATES ARE CRUMBLING

England's Landed Nobility Are Dividing Property Held for Centuries.

London, Sept. 2.—England's great estates are crumbling under the weight of taxation and death duties and one big landed proprietor after another among the nobility is dividing and selling his holdings, many of which have been in the hands of single families for centuries.

The latest indication that peers are finding it necessary to seek smaller homes in the announcement of the Duke of Portland that he may have to abandon his palatial mansion, Welbeck Abbey, in Nottinghamshire. This is only one of the residences of the Duke, who owns some 200,000 acres in England.

"For centuries past landed estates have been handed down from generation to generation," said the Duke, addressing his tenants on the occasion of the coming of age of his son, Lord Francis Cavendish. "Landed lords and tenants have lived on terms of mutual trust and affection. I fear, however, that the state of things is passing away, for, with the present weight of taxation and the extremely onerous incidence of death duties, the future may become very uncertain for all landed proprietors. If this is good for the country, I certainly do not complain."

"With regard to my own case, it may or may not be possible for me and my family to continue to reside at Welbeck, but I fear that there can be little doubt that those who come after me will not be able to do so."

MANY NEW TENANTS

On all sides historic houses are finding new tenants and ancient families are severing their connection with the soil.

The Duke of Devonshire sold Devonshire House in 1919 and Stowe House, the property of Baroness Kinloss, was disposed of recently.

Others who have sold their properties recently include the Duke of Bedford, the Duke of Westminster, the Duke of Rutland, the Duke of Grafton, the Duke of Marlborough, Lord Leconfield, Earl Portman, Lord Camden, Marquis de Castella, Earl Beauchamp, Earl Bradford, Lord Aberdeen, Lord Lovat, Lord Harrington, Lord Harlech, the Countess of Warwick and Sir Richard Bulkeley.

Welbeck Abbey is famous for the subterranean passages and apartments built by the Duke of Portland at a cost of 3,000,000 pounds in order to hide himself from observation by the outside world.

The abbey has an underground riding school 400 feet long, 106 feet wide and 50 feet high, capable of holding 10,000 persons.

There is a subterranean ballroom 158 feet long, 63 feet wide and 21 feet high, the walls of which are hung with famous paintings.

Both the riding school and the ballroom are connected with the abbey by a series of tunnels.

Others features are large subterranean libraries and a tan bark course for galloping horses. It is a quarter of a mile long entirely covered with glass. Altogether there are about 15 miles of tunnelling.

TO OFFER SHIPS FOR SALE.

Washington, Sept. 2.—The nine ships temporarily allocated to the United States Mail Steamship Company will be offered for sale or charter in one lot as a "going concern," it was said at the Shipping Board Thursday night. Prospective purchasers will be required to establish their financial responsibility before their bids will be considered, an official of the board said.

BAKU

And Her Tragic Torches.

Washington, Sept. 2.—The skies above Baku are once more illuminated by the eternal fires of the world's most famous oil region. Near the spot where Zoroastrian or Parsi priests guarded the sacred flames which burned for more than a score of centuries, eighteen modern wells are now ablaze, according to press dispatches. What this great natural waste means is brought out in the following bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographical Society.

"If American relief work is inaugurated in South Russia and if arrangements can be made with the new governments of the Caucasus, the race between charity and starvation may be run largely with Baku oil," says the bulletin. "Already the white nights of north Russia are beginning to wane and the ice which coats the Neva early in the fall will soon be creeping down the queen of Russian rivers and stopping transportation on the one life line of commerce upon which large scale relief work on the lower Volga can depend."

FOOD MAY DEPEND ON FUEL

"The iron rails of Russia have disintegrated with neglect and traffic. The great Russian waterway will be open for at least two months more. And the fuel long used in the Volga steamers and tugs is petroleum and its by-products, principally masut, a thick residue from the refineries. Fuel and food are intimately connected in any plan of Russian relief and stopping transportation on the one life line of commerce upon which large scale relief work on the lower Volga can depend."

"Before the time of the Saracens, Baku was noted for its natural gas and sacred fires at Surakhani, where, from the days of Zoroaster to 1879, the colorless flames of naphtha gas were never extinguished, a temple of the fire-worshippers built in the time of Marco Polo and restored in the time of Shakespeare, can still be seen, although the lighting of naphtha gas is no longer allowed here or on the waters of the Caspian at Bibi Eibat. Fireworshippers on pilgrimages to Baku in the days just preceding the American Revolution had the tradition that the fires of Surakhani had begun to burn when the flood of the world would continue to burn until the end of the world."

FIRE TEMPLES TO RICHES

"When, in 835, A. D., the Arab hosts appeared in Persia and fire-worshippers became Moslems under the sword of the Prophet, large numbers of Zoroastrians fled to India. Their great Tomb of Silence on the slopes of Malabar hill in Bombay, where loathsome vultures await their gruesome opportunity as consumers of corpses, stand as present day reminders of political and religious forces which removed the Parsis from their ancestral homes and placed them in control of modern finance at the gateway to India.

"The modern city of Baku is a combination of the new and the old of the East and the West. Since the establishment of the Azerbaijan republic and the selection of Baku as its capital, some changes have been made. But in general, Baku is what it was before the war.

"In the spring of 1918 there was sharp fighting between the Christians and the Muslims for control of the region. At this time a large part of the Tatar section was destroyed by shell fire from the Caspian. The romantic Kis-Kale of the Virgin Tower, which the Tatars used as an observation post still bears the marks of shell fire which however failed to do serious damage to Byzantine walls. The ancient walls of the old Tatar citadel bear good marks lines which join the apertures in the battlements and which show where Russian and Armenian machine guns sprayed the ramparts and drove the Tatar fighters from their best points of vantage. Then came the British, with a small force from Enzeli. But they soon withdrew, leaving a badly mixed problem to find its own solution.

"The Baku oil fields in 1917, in the midst of war and revolution, produced nearly 50 million barrels of oil. But during the winter of 1917-18, labor troubles and the closing of the 50 mile pipe line to Batum on the Black Sea reduced the output. Political and social unrest have demoralized the oil industry which in Baku had reached a high degree of efficiency.

FURNISH PEACE PRIZES

"During the troubles in 1918, there were frequent threats by various factions that the wells of this famous region would be fired to keep them from falling under foreign control.

"Baku was the field in which Alfred B. Nobel, already dead as the inventor of dynamite and for his success as a manufacturer of explosives, gained the fortune which on his death was partly devoted to the establishment of the Peace Prize and the almost equally famous prizes for distinction in physical science, in chemistry, in medical science and in literary excellence. Theodore Roosevelt, Elihu Root and Woodrow Wilson have been recipients of the Peace Prize founded on profits from Baku oil. Other Americans who have been honored with Nobel prizes are Albert Abraham Michelson for his researches in the velocity and qualities of light; Theodore W. Richards for his study of atomic theories, and Alexis Carrel, for his success in suturing blood vessels and in the transplantation of human organs."
