Appropriate Gowns Being Designed For All Courses

By WILLIAM BIRD. Staff Correspondent of The News. Special Cable Dispatch to The News. Copyright, 1921, by News Publishing Co.

Paris, Sept. 3.—The success of the "cocktail dress," worn by society flappers at Deauville during the moon opening hour, has aroused Paris dress-makers to the need for greater specialization in feminine as well as masculine attire. Consequently the ateliers are feverishly at work turning out new models for the fall and winter trade and, while the strictest secrecy is observed, your correspondent has obtained a few hints as to what may be expected during the coming season.

The general indications are that each garment will be designed for a special purpose and just as no truly smart sportsman would think of playing polo in a billiard costume, or billiards in a polo outfit, so it will be unthinkable in the future for any woman with the least regard for the society page to drink tea in a bouillon suit.

A charming omelette frock promises to be one of the most successful Paris creations. Naturally it has a deep yellow yoke and is shirred around the edge like an egg.

An hors d'oeuvre gown, offered by one of the leading couturiers, combines a number of novel and practical features. One is an olive pit pocket which will save the wearer from the embarrassment of pulling up countless stones on their buttoned plates. This especially welcome feature is especially welcome in since the deep, velvety carpets now in vogue offer small assurance that pits dropped on the floor will roll under somebody else's chair.

CELESTINE CERISE. Another receptacle takes care of the distasteful, sticky residue of celery, the position of which always has been a problem among correct diners-out. But the cleverest correct diner-out, or perhaps the cleverest correct diner-out, no longer need there be any doubt as to longer let the fork with the least of what to do with a Lymnoven that slips off the fork between the half-shell and the lip. The sleeve is water-proofed and holds four oysters and four slices of bread, which can be made up into wiches upon arriving at home. Hungry after a fashionable dinner. Nor are men to be forgotten. The stance there is the morning. It has long been the careful dressers that the attire is affected by husbands in the morning when fishing in the milk and newspaper from before the fire. It is felt that the average pedestrian, however, suitable for wear with the lights out, is not a for the cold critical light of a morning.

The resourceful Parisian designer hit upon a plan so simple that it is under it was never thought of before. The principle of the thing is padding with an invisible stripe. Invisible stripes are no novelty, but this designer adopted the expedient of padding so close together that they create complete invisibility to the wearer. The maiden lady across the hall with the curl papers and a turkey-red wig invariably takes in her milk at the moment, need have no further concern the wearer of this ingenious garment. Women's neckwear is a difficult piece just at this season when the winter is put away for the winter.

A Wonderful Display of NEW FURNITURE

The newest creations of the furniture markets are arriving at our warehouse each day. We are rapidly filling in the gaps made in our stock by our August sale, which closed yesterday, with samples of these attractive new styles and finishes. These goods were purchased at the July markets and are all priced according to the figures set there which are very much lower than expected. It is possible with these new prices to purchase the very finest suites for less than the cheapest cost a year ago. There is a long list of new gate-leg tables, Windsor chairs and rockers to match, breakfast room suites in hand decorated gun-metal finish, spinet desks. All of these goods will be on our floors tomorrow morning and we cordially invite you and your friends to call and inspect them. It will be a most interesting and instructive display.
