COUNTY SCHOOLS OPEN FALL TERM

Prevalence of Male Teachers is One of Features of Session.

The eight months' schools of the county began their sessions Monday morning and, according to Superintendent J. M. Matthews of the county school system, the attendance was larger than usual for the opening day. No announcement could be made as to exact figures but the reports from principals of all the schools indicated the attendance was surprisingly large.

The nine-months' schools opened a week ago and they also were reported to have opened under bright auspices. The other schools of the county will open from time to time until about the middle of November.

One of the matters up for consideration at the meeting of the County Board of Education Monday afternoon was motor bus transportation, which has been tried at several places in the county and found to work admirably. Parents and teachers are reported to be warm advocates of the new method and several new districts are in line for this new phase of school development as soon as the financial arrangements and other preliminaries can be made. The board granted the request of the patrons of the Knox and Central schools in Steel Creek township for motor transportation to the Observer school house.

One of the features of the school openings is the large number of men teachers engaged this year. For several years past men teachers in the county schools have been very few and last year there were only three. This year there are more than 35 men teachers in the county schools and the standard of teaching has been raised in several respects.

NEGRO BAPTISTS TO HOLD A CONVENTION

New Orleans, Sept. 6.—Every State in the Union will have representatives here for the national Baptist convention of negro Baptists, which opens a six-days' session here tomorrow. Preparations have been made for the entertainment of 15,000 delegates and visitors.

Addresses of welcome on behalf of the State and city will be delivered at the opening session by Governor John M. Parker and Mayor Andrew McShane.

A feature of the convention will be the presentation of the annual financial report to the convention, more than $200,000 having been raised for denominational work during the year. The convention operates a theological seminary at Nashville, Tenn., the property of which is valued at $250,000.
