IN MEMORY OF SPURGEON

Sermon by Rev. A. G. McManaway last night at the Tryon Street Baptist Church.

Spurgeon memorial services were held last night in two North Carolina Baptist churches, at Wilmington by Rev. Dr. Pritchard, and at Charlotte by Rev. Dr. McManaway. A very large congregation assembled last night at the Tryon Street Baptist church to hear Dr. McManaway's remarks on the great preacher. Beginning his discourse Dr. McManaway said: This memorial service is not held in order that the subject of it may be eulogized. No man ever had less need of eulogy. The greatness of some men is not recognized until after they are dead, but this was not true of Mr. Spurgeon. At any time within the last twenty years the suffrages of the Christian world would have been practically unanimous in naming him as the greatest personal force of the nineteenth century, and the greatest preacher since days of the Apostle Paul. The voice of no other preacher was ever heard by so many persons, and always with interest pleasure and profit to the hearer, the sermons of no other uninspired preacher were ever translated into so many different languages or so extensively circulated among the masses as his, and no other man has been so signally blessed in being permitted to see the work of the Lord prosper in his hands. Such a man needs no eulogy. But it is appropriate and proper that we as Christian people should glorify our common Lord and encourage our pious hopes by recalling some of the triumphs of this great soldier of the cross.

Mr. Spurgeon's father and grandfather were preachers. In early childhood he began to exhibit those traits which have since rendered him famous. When he was a mere child Rev. Mr. Knill was impressed to prophesy that he would become a great preacher and made him promise to have sung at his first service in his (Mr. Knill's) pulpit the hymn:

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform, and he lived to see that promise redeemed.

At fifteen years of age he fell under conviction of sin. For six months he wandered in deepest mental and spiritual darkness. Out of the painful experiences of that gloomy period grew his strong convictions concerning the grace of God, and his zeal in commending the grace to others. On a snowy Sunday in January, 1850, he started to a distant place of worship, but on account of the fearful weather stopped at a little wayside chapel. The preacher did not come and thus lost his greatest opportunity to do good, for C. H. Spurgeon was one of the two or three gathered there and he had come to find out how to be saved. After a time of weary waiting, an exhorter took the platform and read as a text: "Look unto me and be ye saved," and from the reading of the text the poor enquirer was enabled to see the beauty and simplicity of the plan of salvation and began to rejoice in a new-found savior.

He desired to connect himself at once with the Baptist church, but his father thought him too young to decide so important a step, especially as that step would take him away from the church of his family, and hence did not give his permission for eighteen months. In the meantime, however, the boy took up his life work by being all opportunities to assist in Sunday school and prayer meetings.

At 18 years of age, he began his first pastorate at Waterbench. At 19 he was called to London and began his connection with the church that was his till his death.

In 1856 he started his pastors' college with one student and a tutor. From that college have gone out hundreds of preachers, and 100,000 baptisms have already been reported from their labors.

In 1860 the Widow, a church of England Curate, read an editorial from his pen on taking care of orphans, and she at once sent him $10,000 to start and orphanage for boys. He thought he had work enough and begged, but to give the money to some other orphanage but she was immovable and with that money Stockwell orphanage was started. Money was given afterwards that its privileges might be extended to girls and it now accommodates about 80 children and is always full.

In 1867 he became impressed with the importance of driving out bad literature by supplying the people with the Bible and other good books, and organized a Colportage Association, which has done an immense amount of work along the lines indicated.

It is estimated that Mr. Spurgeon preached as many as 200,000 sermons during his 40 years' ministry. Thirty-seven large volumes, averaging 60 sermons each, have been published. A large number of others were taken by the reporters and it is probable that the weekly publication of his sermons will continue for years.

He was for 28 years editor of the "Sword and Trowel." He wrote seven large volumes of comments on the Psalms. He published four volumes of "Sermon Notes," taken chiefly from his prayer meeting addresses. In addition to these he was the author of several devotional works, of John Ploughman's Talks, and of a number of smaller works of different sorts.

Eleven thousand persons professed faith under his preaching and with him a profession meant a great deal more than extending the hand to a preacher. Multitudes of others were converted and built up in the faith by his published discussions.

We should be grateful to God for giving to our generation such a man. His life is an illustration of what the grace of God can accomplish through a single man. We should also pray that his mantle may fall upon some one able to carry on the great work which he had so worthily begun.

Incidents were related to illustrate traits of Mr. Spurgeon's character and extracts were read from a number of letters to show the widespread influence of his published sermons.
