REFORM ERA IN BUFFALO.

The Recent Election a Notable and Indicative Triumph for National Municipal League's Principles.

Buffalo's local government has been for many years suffering from the same evils, which have existed in every American city where the civic conscience of its citizens has been allowed to slumber. The conditions today in Buffalo are about as they have been for many years past. But the outlook for hange is bright. The November election placed Mr. J. N. Adam in the May-1st, 1996. He is thoroughly acquanted with the city's needs, having been for nearly ten years past a member of one or the other of two legislative boards. In these positions he has served with untiring zeal and exceptional fidelity the interest of both the taxpayer and the municipality. On the ticket with Mr. Adams was elected as Corporation counsel and comptroller, men who stand ready to co-operate with him in his efforts to inaugurate an economical and progressive administration free

Our legislative boards are not yet what they should be. But the people are beginning to appreciate their need serve their interests by acting in office as faithful trustees. Toward securing such, progress has been made. With- now for recreation from the past two years local. in the past two years local leagues have been started whose purposes are to bring to the knowledge of the people the evils existing in the city's government and business management and to point out ways and means of correcting these evils. Much good has already heen accomplished and is now being done by these leagues. Their success done by these leagues. Their success in arousing the interest of the citizens in their work is one of the most hopeful signs for the future. The fight for good government in Buffalo has only commenced and needs the assistance of every force in the country engaged in a similar battle. It can be won in Buffalo as it has been won in Chicago, St. Louis and Philadelphia. It will be so won when the citizens of Buffalo come to understand that God's strength and methods and only His strength and methods enable a Folk or a Jerome to triumph over political bosses and

Paul Dresser's Start.

From the New York Sun.
Paul Dresser, the well-known author of sentimental songs, died last night of dropsy and a complication of diseases at his home, 203 West One Hundred and Sixth street. Dresser was an enormous man and had traveled far and wide in the hope of finding a means of reducing his weight. He had been failing steadily in health for six months.

Dresser was born in Terre Haute 47 years ago. His father operated a woolen mill and wanted Paul to go into that line. The son, however, had different ideas, and when a barnstorming troupe giving a free show to advertise "Wizard Oil," came along Paul ran away from home with it as the organ player.

The old songs the show had in stock didn't appeal to him and he wrote some himself. His songs made a hit in the rural town and he was summoned to the headquarters of the medicine concern at Chicago. He wrote many songs there which were got out in a songster along with advertisements of the oil Dresser branched out for himself in 1885 and made a success with "The Let-ter That Never Came." About this time he joined Billy Rice's minstrel troupe as one of the end men. His next piece to make a hit was "I Believe It, For My Mother Told Me So."

He came to New York and was for some time engaged in the song publishing hysiness lately with the Paul ing business, lately with the Paul Dresser Publishing Company. It was in New York that he wrote "Just Tell 'Em 'That You Saw Me," and his big-gest hit "On the Banks of the Wabash." Over 600,000 copies of this song have been sold. Four brothers and as many

Two miles a minute! The snipe and the linnet Are quite stationary and slow; The lbex and eagle

The worry and the flurry,
That kills all the romance and song.

IN SAN-NA-ZARO.

In San-Na-Zaro's gardens The nightingales are still-They know a sweeter voice than theirs, Is passing from the hill, And the white rose and the crimson, There heads are bending low-For roses lie on Lucia's breast, And Lucia does not know-Pale roses, all too tighty clasped, In hands as cold as snow.

In San-Na-Zaro's cloisters, By one dim altar-light, The gray-haired monks are met Their youngest anchorite;

For Hugo knelt in open hall When passing prayers were read, And kissed with white and shaking

The still face of the dead -The love of might not given to Life, I give to Death," he said.

The monks of San-Na-Zaro, Their doom have spoken now, They cannot know when breaking Assail a broken vow, But in the funeral chamber, Amid the dim-lit gloom, The pale buds laid on Lucia's breast, Unfold in perfect bloom, And that calm smile the dying lips Had lost, the dead resume.

And in San-Na-Zaro's gardens, Now when the night is dim, Young Hugo comes, and nightingales Have songs alone for him, And the white rose and the crimson All down their bending rows, Lean close to touch his clasped hands, And whisper as he goes, Thy kiss hath waked a heart in heaven:

She knows now; Lucia knows." -William Harvey Woods in February

JOAN OF MEXICO.

Was Accused of Sedition and Met With a Sad End in Arizona-Exile's

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 8.-Santa Teresa. once sainted by the people of her native town, Cabora, in the state of Sonora, Mexico, and later banished from Mexico by superstitious officers, who believed that she possessed superhuman power and was responsible for an attempt to incite a revolution, has just died an exile in Clifton, Ariz. With the death of Santa Teresa, or the Saint of Cabora, as she was known in Mexico, passes one of the most wonderful characters of the past genera-

A few years ago in the little pueblo of Cabora, in all the hills of Sonora, Mexico, Terresa Urrea, a plain faced Mexican girl of lowly parentage and about eighteen years of age, began to attract the attention of her people by her alleged wonderful healing powers. She claimed that she was endowed with power to heal the sick and afflicted and went about among the poor people of her town demonstrating her

It was claimed that she accomplished some wonderful cures in the cases of people supposed to be incurably af flicted and wrought such apparent wonders in this line that her native people made her a saint, and from that time on she was affectionately known as Santa Teresa. During the time that she was at tracting so much attention revolutionsts were at work trying to incite an insurrection in Sonora. Santa Teresa was accused by the officials of the state of being the controlling influence that was stirring up the revolution and threats of banishing her were freely made. The sainted girl protested her inno cence of any connection with the revolution and she found a few champions among influential citizens of Mexico some of them public officials. Among hese was Lauro Aguirre, of this city then a captain in the Mexican army Banishment was the punishment met ed out by the government of the state of Senora to Captain Aguirre for his defence of the Saint of Cobora, and he came to this city, where he has since edited a Spanish paper known as La Reforma Social.

Santa Teresa was also banished and in the year 1894 came to El Paso where her fame as a divine healer had preceded her. She set up in a small tent in the southwestern part of the city and the Mexican people flocked to see her in great numbers. The blind, the lame, the halt, the afflicted in every form crowded around her ent to receive the healing touch of her alleged divinely appointed hand. There are many Mexicans in this city now who believe that Santa Teresa was really possessed of some kind

She remained in El Paso for about a month and finally left, going to Ari-

ROME'S FIRST SNOW IN YEARS.

The Little Princess Yolande Thought

the Flakes Were Fairies. Showstorm, the first the Romans have seen in years, was the cause of extreme astonishment to little Princess Yolande, the King's eldest daughter, who is four and a half years old She was awakened early by her nurse and told to look ont of the window. There she saw the strange sight of snowflakes, and was full of questions s to what the strange white things she saw flying in the air were and where they came from. The storm was of short duration, as the sun soon melted the flakes. The sight impressed the little princess as being a fairylike dream, while the flakes she thought to be fairies. For some time the weather in Rome has been very cold. Icicles have been seen in the early morning, and for the first time in years it has been unsafe to leave plants out at night.-Columbia Record.

When Some Men Die. "The world is made bigger when some men die," said a well known citizen the other day. That seems like a rather peculiar proposition at first thought, but this gentleman went on to explain what he meant. It is this: Some men are so intensely selfish and have so much hog disposition about them-so much of the miserly instinct, that they stand in the way of progress. They buy land, or lots, in a growing town and refuse to improve, or sell at any reasonable price. They buy large farms and refuse to sell, unless it is to somebody they can use or control in their own interest. There are plenty of people who would pay a fair price and take the land and improve it, but the land miser either refuses to sell or places a prohibitive price on it. When such a land miser dies it generally leaves his property so that it can go into the hands of progressive men. That is what the gentleman referred to meant by saying that the world is made bigger by the death of some men.

Gladstone's Speech For Irving. Gladstone was a great admirer of Sir Henry Irving, and this admiration was shown one day in the House of Commons, Irving was under the gallery in the house when suddenly, without apparent reason, Gladstone leaped to his feet and delivered an impassioned speech, set off with all the expression and dramatic gesture for which he was so famous. The house seemed surprised. Members looked at one another and murmered, "What is the old man now up to?" They thought it was some deep political game. But a week or two later a friend of Irving's encountering Mr. Gladstone, mentioned the actor's visit to the house, and Gladstone eagerly inpuired: "What did he think of my speech? I made it for him."—Columbia Record.
