TODAY'S MARKETS

COTTON

(Published by the Charlotte Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade.) New York, March 6.—The Liverpool market continues to show more strength than the American markets and some sales are maintained on an extensive scale.

Speculation outside of the Cotton Exchange is reduced to a minimum which results usually in the professional and scalpers preferring the short side.

The market is sustained by the demand for good cotton, the demand for the good grades being apparently insatiable, consequently it is on a legitimate basis but the dullness of the future market, even in the absence of bullish aggressiveness, is not calculated to instill confidence and the advent of some really potential encouraging price making factor seems necessary to revivify speculation.

While waiting for developments looking on the recessions seems advisable. New Orleans Times-Democrat's Summary Cotton.

(Published by Gilbert and Clay of New Orleans, La., Mar. 6.—In the face of a somewhat general desire among the talent for an advance in the cotton market the demand for rather sorry quality cotton is unabated.

New York Summary Stocks and Cotton. (Published by Gilbert and Clay of New Orleans, La.)

New York Mar. 6.—The decline in the stock exchange was too much for cotton, particularly as Liverpool was disappointing, the Houston, Galveston and New Orleans estimates for today were large, and there was a lack of any very aggressive leadership on the bull side, even if some think that Mr. Price is buying and may soon issue another bullish circular.

A TRAGIC DEATH.

Man Found Dead in His Bed With Bottle of Laudanum Under His Pillow. Special to The News. Wilmington, N. C., March 6.—Capt. Tom Taylor, a well-known river man and a former master of the steamer Wilmington, was found dead in his bed late Saturday night.

How Manufacturers Are Made. He who makes something with his hands, or by employing the hands of others, no matter what that something is, is a manufacturer.

The manufacturer is distinct from the merchant or purely business man, in that he both makes and sells. The exclusively mercantile or business man sells without making.

The great manufacturer understands in a general way at least every department of his business, and often is a first-class skilled workman.

"I would not advise any boy," says N. C. Fowler, Jr., in a recent address, "to consider the possibility of becoming a manufacturer who has not a decided mechanical bent, who is not handy with his hands, who does not possess a creative mind, and who does not know how to produce something or to improve upon something already made."

"If he has the mechanical ability he will succeed, even though his success be confined to the purely factory side; but if he develops with mechanical ability business sagacity and the power to properly handle men he will sooner or later become a superintendent or managing head, and, perhaps, an owner in the business."

WOMEN WHO WORK FOR WAGES.

Are They Injuring Their Chances of Marriage by Going into Business? (Juliet Wilbur Tompkins in "Success Magazine.")

"No one will marry you, my dears!" says the alarmist to the young women of business. If they are young enough they answer, in their hearts, "Nonsense!"—whatever their lips may say; as they grow older, the inner repudiation may become tempered with a faint doubt.

To the frank this world seem like an argument against going to work, but there is an argument for it so vast, greater than that which overwhelms this, which is, after all, only a general tendency and need not apply to the particular case.

1,000,000 FARMERS USE 'PHONES.

The Growth of Independent Companies Has Brought the Country in Close Touch With the City. (From "Fighting the Telephone Trust," by Paul Latzke, in "Success Magazine.")

When competition began, in 1894, there was literally not a farmhouse in the country that was connected with the telephone exchange; and perhaps it is no exaggeration to say that there was not a farmhouse that had a telephone. The Bell Company decided absolutely to construct or establish farmers' exchanges or to build farmers' lines.

The report of the Indiana Independent Telephone Association shows that, on May 9 1905 there were, in that state alone, 30,000 farmers connected with the exchanges. In Iowa there are probably twice as many. In Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, and others of the Western States, the number are in proportion.

But the economic side of the telephone question, important as it is, does not, by any means, represent everything to the farmer. It has wrought for him a social, as well as an economic revolution. The advent of the independents and their popular rates have put an end forever to the heart-breaking, demoralizing loneliness of farm and ranch life. Much has been written of the influence that rural free delivery has had on the life of the farmer; but, beside the influence of the telephone in this direction, rural free delivery is almost inconsequential.
