RAILROAD WINS SUIT

Jury Returns a Verdict in Case of Wilson vs. Southern Railway.

The jury in the case of Margaret Wilson, administratrix, against the Southern Railway Company, in which the plaintiff sued for $2,000 for the killing of her father, Mr. S. A. Stewart, near Pineville in August, 1906, brought in a verdict in favor of the railroad late yesterday afternoon.

The trial of this case took the greater part of two days of the court's time, and was warmly contested by counsel. The plaintiff claimed that the deceased came to his death by reason of the negligence of the defendant company.

The defense of the defendant company was that there was no negligence on its part, but on the contrary, the negligence of the deceased contributed to his death.

Stewart was killed by a train while crossing a trestle about one mile from Pineville. The defendant had witnesses to prove that there were signal-posts at each end of the trestle, warning pedestrians, and that the engineer of the train did everything in his power to avert the accident, putting on his air brakes and slowing down.

It was further argued by the defense that the deceased was an old man 68 years of age, with no fixed employment, and that the amount of damages asked was too large even if the jury found the road guilty of negligence.

After the trial of the railroad suit, the next matter taken up was the case of J. P. Munroe against A. B. Sheriff and A. R. Proctor for the recovery of rent money. In this case the plaintiff was awarded $40.

The third case tried was that of Earnest Couser against Isan Stover. This is a suit growing out of a horse trade.
