KITCHIN A HERO TO CHILDISH MINDS

A Sunday School Teacher Asks Her Class of Tots to Name the President of the United States, and One Little Girl Contends That the Fifth District Congressman is the Man.

The Democratic convention which was held recently in this city made a deep impression on the minds of the children, which will wear off only with time. Not only were the children deeply impressed, but every one in the city, both white and black, were, to a certain degree, in a state bordering on demoralization during that week.

A little incident occurred Sunday which shows how the childish mind was impressed with the work of the convention, and how the leading figures in that contest, like gigantic heroes, still remain in their minds.

A Sunday school teacher was teaching her class of little tots, and the lesson was something about the kings of Israel; and, of course, the question came up as to the rulers of the present.

"Who is the president of the United States?" asked the teacher.

"Roosevelt," came the answer from every little mouth but one. A little girl with that lock in her face which is always there when one thinks that the rest have missed a question which one knows said "Kitchin."

To this little mind the Fifth district congressman had superseded every one else in her estimation. Wasn't his name in the mouths of every one for a week, as well as the two other candidates, Craig and Horne; and didn't Mr. Kitchin get the nomination; and why all the fuss and turmoil unless Kitchin was the biggest man in the country; and wasn't the biggest man in the country the president?

Items From Hiddenite.

Hiddenite, N. C., July 14.—Sunday was an ideal day here. Some went to the little Sulphur Springs, Baptist church upon the hill, where the Rev. John A. Smith, assistant pastor of the East Avenue Tabernacle of Charlotte, preached a fine sermon from Hebrews, 6:9, to a congregation of about fifty people, half of which were from Charlotte. There were forty arrivals Saturday and Sunday, mostly transients.

This is a good place to rest; the fare is good, accommodations better, and the water is best of all. There are many things to interest and amuse.

Mr. R. B. Fox, of Charlotte, has been unwell for a day or so, but is better. Dr. Leeper, the resident physician, had to go to Charlotte for treatment, and Dr. Stevenson, of Mooresville, is supplying his place.

Those from Charlotte who spent the weekend here with their wives were Capt. J. R. Anderson, Messrs. J. J. Green, J. A. Yarbrough, C. B. Swinney. We have two mails a day, and when it arrives there is much commotion, every body lining up against the counter waiting to hear their names called.

THIS IS MY 48TH BIRTHDAY.

Owen Wister, author of "The Virginian" and other popular novels, was born in Philadelphia, July 14, 1860, the son of Owen Jones Wister and a descendant of Thomas Penn who emigrated to Pennsylvania as one of the companions of William Penn. He was educated in a preparatory school at Concord, N. H., and graduated from Harvard University in 1888. Having made the law his study, he was admitted to the bar in Philadelphia in 1889. But his love for literature was greater than his love for law and he abandoned the practice of the legal profession in 1891 and went to work with his pen. It was not until nearly ten years later, however, that he scored his first great literary success with "The Virginian," and became entitled to a permanent place among the leading American novelists. Since then he has written a number of successful novels and many magazine articles.

WHITAKER TRIAL NOW IN PROGRESS

Asheville, N. C., July 14.—The trial of the Rev. W. G. Whitaker, charged with using the mails for fraudulent purposes, was resumed before Judge Newman in the United States district court yesterday morning. Whitaker's trial has been on since last Friday. He is the man who was in Buncombe a year or more ago posing as the "representative" of the Whitaker heirs and collecting $10 and upwards from these heirs to aid in "prosecuting" the claim of the heirs for millions of dollars in the Bank of England left by Capt. John Whitaker during the Revolutionary times.

Whitaker claims that there is a vast sum of money in England belonging to the Whitaker heirs. The parson was in England several years ago and some color attaches to his claim. The government contends that Whitaker is a fraud, that he is not the "representative" of the Whitaker heirs and that in using the mails to carry on this alleged fraud he violated the laws of the country.

The government has brought from London to Asheville to testify in the case an employe in the Bank of England. This employe is Harold Vesey. While the cost of bringing the witness across the water is considerable, the government believed it necessary in order to make out its case against Whitaker. No few of those persons who paid Whitaker sums of money to prosecute their claims as heirs of the late Capt. John Whitaker still believe that Whitaker is sincere and that ultimately they will receive large sums of money from the "estate."

One witness testified that when he paid over his money to Whitaker he told the parson that if he was perpetrating a fraud on the people they wouldn't leave a piece of him big enough for a bug-bite. This distinctly new phrase was not at first grasped by the court and the attorneys and the witness was compelled to repeat the conversation several times.

Mrs. Rogers, another of Whitaker's victims, testified that she believed Whitaker was sincere when she paid her money and that she still believes him sincere. There are others in Buncombe who, still believe in Whitaker and although they lost by his operations, are lending him aid in his fight for liberty. There are other victims, however, who have turned against Whitaker and are bitterly prosecuting him.

Harold Vesey, of the Bank of England, was the star witness yesterday. He testified that there was no fund or estate in the Bank of England belonging to the Whitaker heirs. Vesey was subjected to rigid cross-examination by Thomas Settle of the defense. Settle informing Vesey of certain things connected with the Bank of England which the Bank of England official was evidently ignorant of. The case will consume all of today.

Much interest attaches to the calling of the First National bank of Asheville cases Wednesday. It is believed that District Attorney Holton will stubbornly oppose the motion of counsel for the defense to quash the bill of indictment on the ground, as indicated by the defense, that four of the jurors sitting on the grand jury at Greensboro had failed to pay their poll tax. District Attorney Holton is securing evidence relative to this point and when the cases are called there will be considerable testimony introduced concerning the action of this grand jury which was in session more than ten years ago. Records and officials from three counties have been called for.
