

Paris Society Women Attend Famous Trial

'We Will Live Again the Tragic Night' Exclaimed the Judge Advocate And Therewith Began Review of Tragedy.

Fashionably Dressed Women Thronged Court Room - Prisoner S at Deathly Pale - A Merciless Arraignment.

By Associated Press. Paris, Nov. 12.—The court room was thronged with fashionably-dressed women to hear the concluding arguments in the trial of Madame Steinhell.

The accused woman was deathly pale. She sat in the prisoner's dock as in a dream when the robbed judge advocate resumed his merciless arraignment, shouting at the prisoner, "We will live again the tragic night."

The prosecutor insisted that the evidence proved the illness of the Madame after the crime simulated, and that subsequent developments confirmed the suspicion that she acted with hypocrisy.

It was when the police rejected her story of the Gaborine-Clad burglars, and she saw her lover, Borderel, slipping away from her that the Madame began to accuse innocent persons of crime.

A Dramatic Incident. There was a dramatic incident as the prosecutor concluded. M. Aubin, Madame's counsel, jumped to his feet, exclaiming: "Dare you on your conscience to name the accomplices you been hinting at through jury arguments. Were they Marietta and Alex-

By Associated Press. Middletown, Conn., Nov. 12.—After spending a month in the South, and a day in Washington, President Taft came to New England to find another demonstrative welcome.

The visit was primarily to attend the installation of President Shanklin, at Wesleyan University. The university bestowed on the President the degree of Doctor of Law.

andre Wolf? Spectators burst forth into applause. When quiet was restored, Judge Advocate Riello said, "I decline to answer."

Woman Called "Fiend." Madame Steinhell, pale and limp, heard herself described as "a cold, calculating fiend with a soft exterior." As the judge-advocate proceeded with his increasingly severe denunciation, Madame Steinhell bit her lips frequently, raising her clenched hands in mute protest.

The murder of the stepmother was necessary to prove the alibi the accused expected to establish, said the prosecutor.

He characterized as nonsense the rumors of political personages being compromised in the present case.

ANNIVERSARY EDITION CONTINUES TO GROW IN VALUE AND SCOPE

Lost Valuable Bag of Jewels

Value Over $400 Diamond Heartpin, Rings, Necklace, Bracelet and Other Jewelry of Mrs. Ed Mellon.

Mrs. Ed Mellon lost a little bag of jewelry yesterday between the Ed. Mellon store on West Trade street and her home on Poplar street, the value of which will amount to something between $400 and $500.

Sometime ago Mrs. Mellon went out of the city and not caring to take her jewelry with her or leave it at her home, she took it to the Ed. Mellon store where she had it deposited in the safe until her return. The bag contained a diamond breast pin, a bracelet with a solitaire diamond, a diamond necklace and several rings of equal value.

After her return from her trip she allowed the valuables to remain in the safe for several days until yesterday morning when she was about to give a bridge party to a number of her friends. While she was arranging for the social function she decided to wear her jewelry and asked her sister and next-door neighbor, Mrs. T. M. Shelton, to call by the Ed Mellon store when she went to the stores on a shopping mission.

Mrs. Shelton was wearing a rain coat and when she called for the bag of valuable she put them in the shallow pocket of the coat, got into her carriage and drove home. It is thought the jewels were lost as there was no possible chance for a person to take the bag out of her pocket. When Mrs. Mellon sent the servant back with the message that she had lost them, a search followed, but nothing as yet has been learned about the disappearance.

Efforts are being made to find them as it is thought some person picked the bag up when it was dropped between the store and the house.

AWAKES TO FIND MAN IN HER ROOM

Midnight Prowler Enters Home of Mrs. Alexander, But Cautiously Steps Out of the Window When Discovered—No Clue to Identity.

Mrs. Mack Alexander, who lives at the corner of East Liberty and Caldwell streets, had a very frightening experience about 2 o'clock Tuesday morning when she awoke and found an intruder prowling around in her room.

Mr. Alexander was from home and no one was present except Mrs. Alexander, her children, and an old colored woman, who stays there. Mrs. Alexander awoke about 2 o'clock and saw a shadowy form moving about in her room. Thinking it was the colored woman she said nothing until the person passed near her bed, when she reached out her hand and touched the prowler, who proved to be a man, though whether he was white or black Mrs. Alexander could not say.

She screamed and the man then calmly walked to the window and stepped out. Mrs. Alexander called in neighbors and the police were informed, but when officers reached the scene no trace of the midnight prowler could be found.

Will be Issued Early in December to Commemorate 21st Anniversary of The News—It Will Be Sent Broadcast.

Copiously Illustrated With Beautiful Half-Tone Cuts, of Leading, Manufactories and Business Houses of City and County.

To convey to the public an accurate idea of the achievements, resources points of merit and business leadership of any class of enterprises, a special treatise is imperative as the only compelling method of communication with the world of business.

Such a medium is offered through the columns of the Greater Charlotte Edition and many of the shrewdest men of largest business affairs in this city, county and state, realizing its value, have engaged space in this comprehensive work. The circulation will be so extensive, so wide-spread and so thorough, that the publication will be of particular interest to all the higher classes of commercial enterprise, such as mills, factories, contractors, electrical concerns, wholesalers, machine shops and such activities which are the potent factors in the upbuilding of a community and its general development.

In the Greater Charlotte Edition records of the individual success of Charlotte's leading men will be dwelt upon and through them the progress and advancement of the city can be correctly judged.

While the reading matter, both general and personal, contained in the publication will be both interesting and instructive the artistic merit of the paper will not be overlooked. To this end, we have spared neither pains or expense to obtain the finest class of execution in photogravures with which we shall copiously embellish its pages, and by thus visualizing the city's beauty and advancement, the message of a Greater Charlotte can not fail to be enduring and resultant, and sound an invitation to the people and resources of the country at large which shall indeed be a clarion call.

He who looks back in retrospection on the Charlotte of ten years ago and wisely compares it with the Charlotte of today, will behold the metamorphosis of a small agricultural town into a thriving, bustling city of manifold interests and metropolitan facilities. He will ask himself how this has been achieved and his reason will tell him, by united effort, by unceasing endeavor and by the adding of force upon force to every upward and onward movement. This is what constitutes civic pride, public spirit, good citizenship. This is the class of men Charlotte welcomes and whose good works speak eloquently for them and concerning whom all may read in the columns of the Greater Charlotte Edition.

Charlotte affords a wealth of opportunity for investors and manufacturers of all sections of the country. Our street railways, our gas and electric service, our great factories and machine shops are conducted by both Northern and Southern capital, to the men who have come to Charlotte and with their experience, their ingenuity and their funds have worked with us shoulder to shoulder, or taught us ways of developing our great resources and unsuspected sources of commerce, every man, woman and child who has Charlotte's welfare at heart, should feel cordial gratitude.

Within the last few months, nearly every city of consequence in the South has issued an illustrated edition proclaiming its immediate progress. The Charlotte News gladly accepts the challenge, sure that we have a message to send and that no town in the country can show an abler record of the energy and endeavor of her people than the Queen City of the South.

Through a 200 page illustrated edition the new San Francisco bears to the world the tidings of her entire rehabilitation, thus proving incontrovertibly the truth of our assertion that these editions constitute the only logical method of recording plainly the true status of a city and of its best representatives.

TO MAP OUT PROGRAM.

Executive Committee of Mecklenburg Agricultural Conference to Meet. The executive committee of the Mecklenburg Agricultural Conference, pursuant to a call issued today, will meet Tuesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in the office of the Greater Charlotte Club, at the Selwyn Hotel, for the purpose of discussing plans for the holding of the next conference and of formulating a tentative program.

It is the intention of those in charge to begin preparations early so that the best speakers obtainable can be secured to take part in the conference, and the discussions will be along these lines at the called meeting Tuesday.
