Moisant Painted

With the coming of the commercial air fleets, there will be for a time a world-wide saturnalia of smuggling, the foresees, to be followed by the readjustments of nations to the new age—the aerial age—and then an unexampled freedom of exchange and a lasting peace. For with the walls at the boundaries of nations gone, there would be no occasion left for war.

Nearly every one hitherto has dwelt upon the possibilities of the air fleets as engines of war; and then predatory swoops from the upper air and their grim facilities for dropping dynamite upon defenseless towns have been put into graphic tales.

These are dreams, Moisant thinks—mere literary nightmares.

War there might be between aerial squadrons, but not wanton war. The common business interests of the nations would intervene to prevent the wholesale bombardment of cities from fleets above.

But said Moisant, coming back to his first statements, what would seriously disturb existing conditions, or, rather, what, in his judgment, will be the perfecting of aerial vessels to carry freight. When this is done the trade of the world will be changed, and the whole system of governments, now dependent upon frontier revenues—a form of income collected to finance a military establishment maintained largely to enable the countries to make that collection possible—will become obsolete.

The tariff walls to take their places with the portuliculi and the moat.

As Moisant predicts this, not for a remote day, but as a reconstruction, dynamic and irresistible, the signs and portents of which now fill the sky.

He predicts that the white science of aviation will be startling in its new discoveries.

Already, as he well said, progress in aviation is swifter than in any field man has sought to dominate.

Moisant was greatly impressed with Moisant, the architect and builder, practical mechanic, economist, climber of the sky. For he has indeed hitched his chariot to the firmament. And his mind has seemingly taken the poise and freedom of the winged successes that lift him above the present along paths that lead no man yet knows where.

J. W. Guess Dead

City Will Bury Him

Outraged nature finally asserted itself, and W. J. Guess, the man who drank ecstasie with suicidal intent Friday afternoon near the Elizabeth Mills, died yesterday afternoon about 5:30 p. m. in the Presbyterian hospital.

Hope was entertained up to yesterday morning for his ultimate recovery, but the poisoning had so thoroughly saturated his system that death was inevitable.

His brother-in-law from Fort Mill visited him yesterday afternoon, but before the man died. He seemed indifferent as to Guess' condition, and made no offer or suggestion as to the disposition of his body when he died. The man was violent Friday night, and sank into a stupor yesterday morning.

The coroner took charge of the body and the city will give it burial.

Editor Weathers

Takes Up His Pen

Mr. Lee B. Weathers' former city editor of the News, but lately telegraph editor on the Chronicle, left last evening for Shelby, his home, to begin the New Year as editor of the Cleveland Star, one of the best established papers in the state. Mr. Weathers is a fine newspaper man. He loves the work, and wields the pen of a ready and gifted writer. The News along with his many Charlotte friends wish him a happy new year and unbought success in the responsibilities the new year brings him as editor-in-chief.

Many went out yesterday to witness the test by fire, of the house, near the Atherton Mill, built by the Carolina Brick & Tile Company, of its brick and tile. The test was made for and by representatives of insurance companies—the South Eastern Underwriters' Association. The tile and brick stood the test well. Messrs. Frank Sawyer and Paul Chatham are interested in the Carolina Company.

John B. Moisant

Four times he circled the field at a height of about 200 feet. Suddenly something went wrong. The engine was working regularly, but the monoplane became unmanageable. It sagged in front and went through strange motions.

The machine bucked and pitched downward. Moisant could be seen trying to manipulate the planes so as to lift the weight of the engine, which is placed forward, up to an even keel. He threw himself backward as far as possible, his weight being the only thing that kept the Bleriot from diving to the earth.

The monoplane came down as if the aviator was trying to glide to earth. Suddenly, when the machine was 100 feet above ground, Moisant slid out of it and fell like a stone. The strap which held him to his seat had broken and he lost his hold.

The aviator landed on his head and shoulders, and the horrified crowd rushed across the field to where he lay beside the wreck of the monoplane. He was still alive, and he was lifted and placed in a racing automobile.

The chauffeur turned on all his power in a race for a special train and the engineer of that made all possible speed for this city. It was too late, however, and Moisant died on the train.

A physician who was at the flight was in the automobile and in the train with the injured man, but he was unable to keep him alive until he reached New Orleans.

Moisant narrowly escaped death last Tuesday. He had gone up 9,000 feet in an effort to break the elevation record. At that height his engine froze and he was forced to glide to the ground.

A strong wind swept him toward a partially cleared tract of scrub forest, half a mile from the aviation ground. As he was about to be dashed against the trees, his engine thawed out in the winter atmosphere. He managed to skid along the surface of the ground, got the engine working properly again and then, without alighting, ascended, circled over the forest and returned to the field.

ALBERT WOLTER

WILL MARRY

IN SING SING

New York, Dec. 31.—Katie Muller, the companion of Albert Wolter, under sentence of death for the murder of Ruth Wheeler, expects to marry Wolter in the death house at Sing Sing in order to legitimize their child.

While Wolter was under arrest and before he was tried, both he and the girl wished to be married, but the authorities would not permit it because they wanted her as a witness against him and as his wife, she could not have testified. Now, however, that objection is removed, and the girl has retained counsel to assist her in their marriage.

"Albert and I want to become wife and husband as soon as possible, but the law will not permit us," she said today. "I have one wish, and that is to marry Albert before he dies in the electric chair, so that our child will become legitimized. My boy is innocent, and why should he be made to suffer? Albert has talked the matter over with his mother and he is prepared to marry me before he dies, but the law will not permit us to marry. This means that my son will have to suffer when he becomes a man."

CARNEGIE GAVE

GERMANY BIG

"HERO FUND"

Berlin, Dec. 31.—Andrew Carnegie, the American multi-millionaire, has endowed Germany with a hero fund of $1,250,000, the prizes and pensions to be distributed by a commission to be appointed by Emperor William. The emperor recently wrote a long personal letter to Mr. Carnegie expressing his appreciation.

The plans, which have made similar funds successful in the United States, England and France will be followed.

Mr. Carnegie established the first hero fund in April 1904, when he placed $5,000,000 with a commission with instructions to use the annual proceeds of the amount as rewards for heroic acts in saving lives in the United States, Canada and Newfoundland. In 1908 he created a similar fund in Great Britain, and in 1909 gave $1,000,000 to establish a fund in France.

The total amount set apart by Mr. Carnegie for hero funds is now $8,000,000.

Additional Suspensions

of Railroad Tariffs

Washington, Dec. 31.—Additional suspensions of the tariffs of various railroads in connection with the cancellation of divisions of rates with tap lines were made today by the Interstate commerce commission. The tariff suspensions affect 557 carriers. The cancellations are suspended from January 5, 1911, until April 15, 1911, or until such time as the commission may announce a final order in the cases.

A continuation of the New Orleans hearing in the tap line cases will be held in St. Louis, Mo., on January 23, 1911, before Commissioner Harlan.

The cases will be argued orally before the full commission in Washington on March 15, 1911.

RESUME OF WEEKS

DEALINGS ON

WALL STREET

New York, Dec. 31.—The closing session of the old year was uneventful. Less than 100,000 shares were dealt in and price fluctuations were unimportant. The London market was lower for Americans and some recessions took place in a few of the leading shares in the local market. There was nothing, however, to suggest changed opinions or even professional interest in the proceedings.

The bank statement showed a decrease in reserves of $3,710,000 in the actual statement. This was largely the result of about $17,000,000 increase in deposits. The increase in loans as of $1,451,000 was merely incidental to preparations by trust companies for year-end statements, and the transfer of loans from these institutions to the clearing house banks.

The year's gross railway earnings have probably exceeded any in the history of the country, but from causes obvious and apparently unavoidable the net revenue will fall short of last year. This much seems assured, though calculations are now based on only the last half of the calendar year.

The coming year will bring with it supreme court decisions on the Standard Oil and American Tobacco cases and determining the scope of the Sherman anti-trust law as applied to the organization and administration of these corporations. These decisions are looked forward to with interest in Wall Street but no longer with apprehension. The lower court decision in the anthracite cases has been taken to mean that whatever the supreme court may decide in the more important cases before that tribunal the result has been prepared for and no disturbing change or reorganization will be found necessary.

The price level in the security markets cannot be regarded as high with the average interest and dividend returns standing as at present. Notwithstanding many warnings and pessimistic forecasts of what is likely to happen during the coming year nothing at present appears to justify a belief in reduced dividends or changes of drastic character in net revenue returns. The labor situation is yet unsettled as the railroad rate question in obedience before the interstate commerce commission. Much hangs on the settlement of this last problem but Wall street feels confident that a fair and impartial decision will be reached which will enable railway corporations to continue to pay for extension and constructive betterment of their lines.

With the balance of trade turned moderately in favor of America through enormous exports of cotton and also following reduced imports of foreign merchandise the money market promises to be easy with abundant funds for all purposes during the early days of the coming year. A good demand has recently prevailed for bond issues and a large part, if not all, of the heavy holdings of syndicates and underwriters have found their way into permanent investment.

Brother of Aviator

Overcome With Grief

New Orleans, La., Dec. 31.—When Albert Moisant entered the undertaking parlors where his dead brother was laid out he would not look at the corpse for a few moments, but gradually he turned around, and after taking a few glances at the still, cold body, he finally fixed his gaze upon the lifeless form.

He turned to look for a chair as though to support himself, and seeing one at the further corner of the room he walked unsteadily toward it and sank down a complete picture of grief.

He did not remain long seated, however, but walked over and looked again at his dead brother, then turned and walked away, repeating this act four or five times. Then he paced the floor for about ten minutes, all the while becoming more and more excited and at times becoming exceedingly more hysterical.

Crawford H. Ellis, who was present in the room, tried to console the grief stricken man but to no avail.

The sight of the dead brother finally became so unbearable that Mr. Moisant left the room and hurried to the hotel, where an attempt was made by reporters to talk with him, but he was so overcome that he was unable to be seen.

It is believed that Moisant's death will end the tour. The meeting here was called off after the accident. The next date was to have been Houston, Texas, but the aviators are not likely to go there now.

The International Aviators, Inc., have lost $280,000 on the Southern tour, according to Albert Moisant. The loss at the New Orleans meeting has been $15,000.

Hamilton Talks

of Hoxsey Death

New Orleans, Dec. 31.—Charles K. Hamilton, one of the international aviators here, commenting today on the tragic death of Archie Hoxsey at Los Angeles said:

"It is a singular coincidence, that the leading aviators who were close friends should be killed on the last day of the most notable year in the development of aeronautics. Hoxsey was a great flyer and had a brilliant future. He and John B. Moisant had exchanged letters within the week."

"It is funny luck—seven aviators killed in three days."

"However, that ghastly record shall not deter me, as I am as confident as ever that aviation cannot be held in check and that these martyrs are merely milestones on the road toward ultimate success and practicality."

"Warning had been given Moisant by his fellows time and again that he could not negotiate the dangerous right hand dive in a monoplane," continued Hamilton. "This type of machine cannot be guided from the front like a biplane can be manipulated. We all anticipated today's tragedy because Moisant insisted that he could dip the car with one plane."
