Precious Stones in Decorative Art.

Diamonds, rubies, sapphires and pearls have been used in all forms of decoration. The wonderful Peacock Throne of the Mogul emperors, which was carried off to Persia by Nadir Shah in 1751 to adorn his palace, owed its beauty to the artistic blending of the colors of innumerable precious stones, and the magnificent thrones of the Russian potentates owe their splendor to such decoration. The malachite and the lapislazuli columns of churches such as that of St. Isaac in St. Petersburg and the chrysopease walls in that of St. Wenzel in Prague, are also examples of what can be accomplished by a happy combining of colored stones. The Mineralogist in the palace at Potsdam is another striking example of this, but many of the minerals are in their natural state. Pearls and gems of all kinds have been used to embroider gowns, and have also been used in the cover decoration of books and ancient missals; notably the Ashburnham Morgan Gospels, dating from the ninth century.

The late Queen Isabella, of Spain, instructed her shoemaker to cover her shoes and slippers with diamonds, at the same time directing that some on each slipper should be loosely attached, so that they would detach in the dancing and be picked up by the guests and sweepers of the ballroom floor, who would find them to be genuine diamonds, thus proving that Queen Isabella never wore any imitation stones.

In Bokhara and in other parts of the east turquoise and carnelian, as well as coral, are used to adorn the trappings of horses and dogs, and our western world of today offers as an eccentricity the use of diamonds by a few ladies of the west to decorate their front teeth and the teeth of a dog. We also find human skulls in ancient Mexican graves that are inlaid with small discs of jadeite and it is more artistic than the diamond incrusting. While this last need practice is certainly not a fruit of true artistic culture, it still may serve to show how widespread has been the tendency to employ precious stones for decorative purposes.—Address by George F. Kunz.

WIFE'S RIGHTS.

Less than a century ago Justice Buller handed down his learned decision that the common law empowered a husband to administer reasonable correction to a wife with a stick not thicker than his thumb, says the Chicago Tribune. In these humane or hypnotized days, all physical correction of a wife by her husband is held unreasonable. If he lay his hand upon her twice otherwise than in the way of kindness, it is cause for divorce in most states. To maul her he may be sent to the Bridewell.

We have departed so far from the common law theory that husband and wife are one as to allow her to sue in her own behalf in her own name. But a wife in the District of Columbia has discovered that there is an exception to the emancipation act. She can prosecute her husband criminally for an assault, but she can not bring a civil suit for damages. The wife had brooded over seven beatings for two years and then asked for damages.

D. A. R. INVITATIONS.

A. R.'s of the several chapters in Charlotte to announce to their friends that any oversight of names on the list is not intentional, but due to the above fact. A royal good time is expected and it is hoped that every D. A. R. and those of her friends who have been overlooked, as well as those who have been invited, will call at the home of the regent, Mrs. J. E. Telley during the hours of four to six.
