Murderer Dies In Electric Chair

By Associated Press. Auburn, N. Y., May 3.—Joseph Nesce, alias Nash, was executed in the electric chair early today for the murder of his son-in-law, Thomas Delmonte.

Nash went to the chair unflinching. Among the witnesses of the execution was Policeman W. H. Litzemberger of Waterloo, N. Y., whom Nash nearly killed. Muttering in Italian, "God have mercy upon me," Nash spent the last moments in caressing his crucifix.

After relinquishing the metal cross to the attending priest and the chair straps all adjusted, he called to be allowed to kiss the crucifix again.

The request was granted and a moment later the current was turned on. Nash, who was a prosperous resident of Waterloo, called at the home of his daughter on the night of Feb. 7, 1910, and engaged in a quarrel with his son-in-law, Thomas Delmonte, over the payment of a meat bill.

After the shooting Nash fled. Policeman William H. Litzemberger pursued him and came up with him in a cornfield south of Waterloo. Nash shot the policeman three times and wounded him in the left arm, through the nose and again through the cheek and neck, and escaped to Seneca Falls where he was arrested.

Grip of the Shoe Trust

By Associated Press. Washington, D. C., May 3.—The declaration that the "trust" grips the entire shoe manufacturing industry of the United States was made today before the senate committee on finance which began hearings on the Canadian reciprocity bill. Manufacturers from the middle West told the committee they were practically at the mercy of the United Shoe Machinery Company, of Boston.

It was suggested that a report of the hearings be transmitted to the attorney general. The principal spokesman for the shoe manufacturers was William D'Oench, of St. Louis. With him were manufacturers from St. Louis, Chicago and Grand Rapids, Mich. An incidental reference to a failure to reduce the duty on brass wire used in the manufacture of shoes led Mr. D'Oench to say that the "trust" made it impossible to buy brass wire abroad.

"Why don't you buy all your machinery abroad then?" asked Senator Simmons, of North Carolina. In reply the shoe manufacturer referred to the 45 per cent duty which stood in the way.

"Would the removal of that duty make shoes cheaper?" asked Senator Simmons. "It would, but I can not say how much." The witness said the royalty charged by the shoe machinery "trust" in less than a year would be sufficient to buy the English machinery outright. Senator Smoot contended that under these circumstances the duty should not prevent the American manufacturer buying European machinery.

Mr. D'Oench declared, however, that the shoe manufacturers could not get all of their machinery in England and to get part of it from the American concern they were required to buy all.

Senator Bailey declared that if the report of the hearing was transmitted to the attorney general it ought to "make trouble for the shoe machine trust." Senator Gallinger said he thought patents on machinery would protect the machinery manufacturing company from the charge of being a "trust." Senator Bailey asserted they would not.
