Good bidding resulted in the disappearance of most of the decline. The belief that the powers will induce Italy to grant a substantial concession to Turkey helped to bring about a cheerful hardening tone, which prevailed at noon. Consols were then only 1-4 and Turkish bonds 1-2 lower than yesterday while American shares were well above par.

In the last hour of trading values were inclined to droop from the best and the market closed quiet with a feeling of uncertainty pending further developments.
