The Johnson-Varley method of transmitting cable and wireless messages depends on the property of thin metallic strips or reeds of vibrating in unison when their note is the same, but if remaining quiet in the presence of other vibrations. Combining a number of these reeds, each with its own coil, and having a corresponding receiver at the other end, it is made possible to send each letter, figure or other character with a single impulse, instead of requiring several impulses as in the Morse system. The transmission is by high-tension current of small quantity, and the usual chain of the cables with static electricity is avoided. A number of different instruments can be operated simultaneously over the same cable, as the impulses do not interfere with those of different tuning. The application of the principle to wireless telegraphy is said to make practicable an ingenious receiver to be used independently for things, so that it may vibrate, or tune, so that it may pick up (1) general messages of the telegraphic system, (2) semi-private messages intended only for a certain number of stations, and (3) secret messages, which are receivable only by the special instrument in tune with the transmitter.

The chaparral or dwarf forest of Southern California is found by F. G. Plummer, of the Forest Service, to be confined to the coast region from Monterey to San Diego, extending from sea level to a height of 8,000 feet. It is composed of trees—not shrubs—dwarfed by the insufficient winter rainfall, and embraces about 40 species, including oak, pine, maple, inflammable and less desirable soft woods. It is important as a ground cover for the water-shed supplying water for irrigation and municipal use.

The cancer cure of Prof. von Wassermann, German bacteriologist, seems to be in injections of coccin, turpentine and celenium. Some mice were entirely cured of cancerous ulcers in ten days, after four injections, but the experimenter cannot yet state that like amazing results can be expected in human patients.

When two perfectly plane polished surfaces of steel are pressed together they adhere more strongly than can be explained by atmospheric pressure, and 35 years or more ago Tyndall reached the conclusion that the phenomenon is due in part to molecular attraction. Some recent investigations of H. M. Budgett, reported to the London Royal Society, disprove this theory, showing that the adhesion results from the presence of a very thin liquid film. Some blocks of hardened steel were prepared, each weighing an ounce and a half and having surfaces of 0.7 square inch polished flat to within a millionth of an inch of accuracy, and these were used to test the adhesive properties of many liquids. The contact faces were carefully freed from moisture and grease with alcohol before being smeared with a very thin film of the liquid under test. On wringing together perfectly clean blocks, they fell apart under their own weight; but blocks held together by films required to separate them a force ranging from 17 pounds for Rangoon oil to 22 for lubricating oil, 29 for turpentine, and 35 for condensed water vapor. After washing the hands with soap, blocks rubbed on them showed adhesion as high as 90 pounds. There was no adhesion from volatile liquids, like alcohol and benzine; and very little from viscous liquids, such as glycerine and glucose. The microscope showed that the films, drawn out in thin lines, covered only a tenth or less of the metal faces. From varied experiments, it appeared that in the case of the paraffin film, for instance, the 27 pounds required to part the plates included about 1 pound due to atmospheric pressure, 1 to surface tension, and 25 pounds to the actual tensile strength of the liquid. The tensile strength of water seemed to be as high as 443 pounds per square inch.

A new theory of the great fertility of alluvial soil has been brought to the notice of the Royal Microscopical Society by Rev. Hilderich Friend. It is usually explained that the fresh soil brought by occasional floods keeps up the richness of the land, but now the real cause is affirmed to be the vast numbers present in the mud deposit of a tiny worm that buries its head and waves its tail above the surface. In some places an ounce of ooze has been found to contain a quarter of an ounce of these worms.

The name of Mr. W. J. Gray should have been included in the personnel of the buildings and grounds committee of the board of school commissioners yesterday.

Police Called Out!

PUBLIC SALE

It is the talk of the town. The bargains at the great public sale of the stock of the Berryhill-Sutherland Co., now the "Hub," being sold by the great Consolidated Shoe Company of Buffalo, New York. Ten thousand people found a place for bargains Thursday. Well this may be. As this is unquestionably the greatest commercial sensation bearing record in the annals of Charlotte. We were obliged to call upon the police to prevent people from being crushed. Goods were carried away in armfuls in the rapid way in which people purchased. Proves that they found fine shoes, slippers and oxfords, etc., marked and selling at the low prices advertised. Yesterday is a day that will long remain in the minds of all who attended the great sale. Mr. Garrey, conductor of the sale, wishes to explain to those who were turned away and could not get in, that many extra clerks have been engaged to meet the demands of this great sale: so be on hand tomorrow—Saturday—and join the crowd, and participate in this great bargain feast.

S. S. LESSON

THE BIRTH OF JESUS.

Lesson 3, January 21, 1912.

Motto Text—"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." (Luke 2: 11.)
Lesson Passage, Luke 2: 1-20.
Passage for reading in opening exercises, Luke 2: 8-20.
Memory Verses, 10, 11.

Where and When. The place of the birth of Jesus was Bethlehem, a little city a few miles south of Jerusalem. Joseph and Mary came to this city from Nazareth, where they made their home. The exact time of his birth is not known, but by means of certain dates in Roman history, and the history of Herod the Great, and by making certain astronomical eclipses, it is now ascertained that Jesus was born about five years before the date usually assigned as A. D., or Anno Domini. This change need disturb no one, for the New Testament nowhere tells us what year and month Jesus was born.

Angelic Announcements. The birth of Jesus was foretold to the Virgin Mary by the angel, Gabriel, the same angel who foretold the birth of John the Baptist (Luke 1: 26-38). It was also foretold by "an angel" to Joseph, who was engaged, as we would say, to be married to Mary (Matt. 1: 18-22). We must remember that the Son of God lived in heaven with the Father and Holy Ghost—one God in three persons—from all eternity. It was, therefore, natural that his birth should be of interest to the angels, and that angels should appear to men when such an unheard of event as the birth of the Son of God into the world was about to take place. Heaven and earth, after all, are not far from each other. The birth of Jesus had been foretold centuries before by the prophets, and one had prophesied that he should be born in "Bethlehem in the land of Judah" (Micah 5: 2).

The Birth of Jesus. Mary and Joseph lived in Nazareth, almost a hundred miles from Bethlehem. Nazareth was an obscure and not very reputable town in the northern part of Galilee, and Bethlehem was the birth-place and early home of David, the great king of Israel. Both Mary and Joseph were descendants of David, but they were poor. How, then, was it possible that Jesus should be born in Bethlehem? God brought it about through the Romans, who were masters of Galilee, Judea and all the surrounding country. The emperor Caesar Augustus, made a decree that all the world which he controlled should be enrolled for taxation. This was a census taken for information along several lines, but particularly for taxation. Ordinarily, of course, people were enrolled in the places where they lived, but the Jews had a law that people should be enrolled in the places from whence their families sprung, and also by families. This law was observed in the case of the enrollment ordered by Augustus. Naturally he would not care how it was done just so it was done, and perhaps it suited him and his "king," Herod, all the better that the Jews went to enroll themselves by tribes and families. He could keep up with them all the better. There is something noble and pathetic in the way the Jews clung to their old family tribal divisions.

And so it came to pass that Joseph and Mary both went from Nazareth to Bethlehem to be enrolled. They traveled together, and most probably in company with their neighbors and friends. Thus they proceeded on their journey southward either through Samaria or by way of Persis beyond Jordan. They were poor, and probably walked, or at best rode on donkeys. When they reached Bethlehem they tried to get into the inn, or hotel, but others had preceded them, and there was no room for them. They were constrained, therefore, to seek shelter in a stable, or cattle barn, nearby, and that night was Jesus born. Mary "brought forth her firstborn Son and wrapped him in swaddling clothes," and laid him in one of the manger's by her side (Luke 2: 6-7).

The Vision of the Shepherds. That same night there was another angelic visitation. Certain shepherds were keeping watch over their flock on the bleak hillsides near Bethlehem, when suddenly an angel appeared unto them, and "the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid." But the angel told them not to be afraid, saying that he came with good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. The good message was that on that day of David's birth, which is called the city of Bethlehem, which is called the city of David because it was the home of the king in boyhood, there had been born the long-expected Messiah, who was to be given as the Saviour of the world. They were given a sign by which to know that the angel's message was true, and to identify the baby. The baby should be wrapped in swaddling clothes, showing it was an infant, and should be found lying in a manger, which was a very unusual thing.

Scarcely had the angel given this message before the shepherds saw a great host of angels, the heavenly host, which is called a multitude because there were so many, were singing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased" (Revised Version). The coming Messiah was the great glory of the revealing God. For the peace of earth meant God's free grace, and it should bring peace of soul and life.

The shepherds did not linger; they had seen a great sight, and believed the message; they started at once for Bethlehem, that they might discover the sign which was to verify the message. The baby was discovered lying in the manger. The shepherds made known the vision which they had seen, probably to all who would listen. It is evident that their testimony was heard by many in Bethlehem. All who heard wondered. Mary, different from the rest, and understanding what the vision meant, remembered the things they said, and meditated upon them. The shepherds returned to their flocks, giving praises to God.

Lesson Explanations. Caesar Augustus—The Roman emperor. All the world—All the Roman world. Enrolled—a census taken. Quirinius—Governor of Syria. Every one into his own city—This is explained in the Bible. In a Jewish census men were enrolled by families, and went to the family center, swaddling clothes.—The usual dress for a Jewish infant. In a manger.—The only convenient cradle at hand. The glory of the Lord.—A supernatural brightness. To all the people.—Jesus became flesh not for the Jews only, but for all mankind. The city of David.—Bethlehem, because it was the original home of David, Christ.—The Messiah. A multitude of the heavenly host.—A great company of angels and other celestial beings. Peace among men in whom he is well pleased.—The verse is a little hard to understand, but it probably means that the blessings of the Messiah would come to those to whom in his good from them into heaven.—The angels appeared suddenly, but in their disappearance they were seen to go into the heavens. Let us now go.—That is, please God, let us be ordained to stand at once. All that heard.—The shepherds told their story to all who would listen, and not to Joseph and Mary only. Mary kept all these sayings.—That is, she remembered them.
