Letter from Smithfield.

SMITHFIELD N.C. April 20 b, 1885.

Noticing, Mr. Ed tor, from the columns of your paper, that you have no regular weekly correspondent in Smithfield, and believing it will add to the increasing popularity of THE BUD, to have in its columns a communication from the county's capitol each week, I in compliance with your request, shall undertake to furnish manuscript, or (as you, in editorial parlance would term it) "copy," in sufficient quantity, (if not the best quality) to fill the column allotted to me. It is much easier, I should imagine.

for a newspaper reporter or correspondent to till a certain de-

President Ceveland's daily routine business has been serious ly retarded during the past week by the illness of Col. Lamout, his private secretary, who has succumbed to over-work. Since the commercement of the Admunistration Col. Lamont bas been a marvel to those around him. His example of energy and industry is one that few of the Government's servants care to imitate. He has been at his desk every day before 9 A. M., and his working hours bave continued beyond midnight. His days are devoted to the President and to the constant stream of business callers. The bours after dark he has spent in disposing of correspondence that required his personal attention. One of his associates remarked that the Colouel seemed to have no other ambition than to perform the work before him. He neither reads the papers, smokes, gossips, plays cards, nor goes to clubs or any places of amusement. His waking hours are devoted entirely to the President's service. Even Mr. Cleveland, who has scarcely ever known what it was to feel the pressure of constant application, looked a little jaded at the reception the other evening, and at one time during the in a or uandsbaking, called for a glass of . ter. During the heated term of the coming summer, he will occupy the cottage reserved for the use of Press ents at the Soldier's Home park. He will have more time to bimself there, will be able to take more exercise, and can enjoy cooler atmosphere than at the White House.
