Kesiah

The size of the teacher is a very important factor in public classrooms, or so thinks Paul Kesiah, who is now elementary science teacher at Harding High School. Paul, who attended CCUNC for three quarters before going on to Chapel Hill for his B. S. degree and who happens to be a pretty big man, is inclined to think perhaps any potential ruffians in his eighth-grade classes find his size a bit of a surprise in comparison with the five-foot three female teacher which they probably have had in the past. So far, Paul says, he hasn't had any occasion to throw his considerable weight around, but it's an asset nevertheless.

Kesiah's should be a familiar face to Charlotte College students who were around last year, for he was on the faculty of Central High School for the last half of the year as a replacement for another teacher who had to drop out. This year he went back to Harding where he had done his practice teaching before coming to Central.

Paul's kind words about CCUNC were nice to hear and his appreciation of several of our faculty was a tribute to some of the teachers he had while he was studying here. He found that the changing of schools from CCUNC to Chapel Hill was not at all difficult, but stated that, of course, a change of that kind rests pretty well on the individual, too.

A chance for a fellowship of scholarship next year is the thing that Paul is looking forward to at present. He hopes to do graduate work in the field of education, for his primary interest is in administrative and guidance work in the schools.

The obvious interest that Kesiah shows in learning makes it very clear that his field is well picked, and, of course, we at Charlotte College wish him a great deal of success personally and as one of our first alumni.

Square?

There will be a Thanksgiving combination square dance and open house in the gymnasium on November 23 from nine until twelve. This function is for the students; and the support of the student body is requested.

Enrollment

In this first quarter that the Charlotte College is on its own, the total enrollment has reached 350. This figure is a source of great joy to the whole community, especially when it is noted that 270 of the total are regular college students, and 80 are taking the special non-college credit courses.

The two sections of the C.P. C.U. insurance discussion group which meet every Monday and Thursday have an enrollment of 25. The L. U. T. C. group which meets every Wednesday from 3:30 until 6 o'clock has 20 members.

There are nineteen in the Driver's Education and Training class which meets three hours per week.

The sewing class meets every Wednesday night from 7 until 9. There are ten members of this class who meet in the sewing room of Central High School.

One of the most unusual and beneficial classes offered by the College is the class in interior decoration which meets from 7 until 9 on Thursday. The ten members of this group will hear such outstanding speakers as Dr. Herbert Mechenbleikner on Landscaping and Gardens; Mrs. Elizabeth Mack on Color in the Home; Mr. Roy Palmer on Wall Finishes and Lighting; Mrs. Jack Redmond on Window Treatments and Decorative Fabrics in the Home; Mr. L. M. Oglucian on Rugs and Floor Coverings; Mrs. H. L. Parker on Flower Arrangements; Mr. Leon Gutman on China and Objects of Art in the Home; Miss Charlotte Mobley on The Modernized Kitchen and Electrical Appliances; Mr. William Huss on Refinishing Furniture; and Mr. Joseph S. Hutchinson on Pictures in the Home.

Results

Well, students, the elections are over. Most of the contests were mighty close, but the student body has selected a mighty fine group of fellow classmates to lead us for the next year.
