60,000 Volumes By Semester End

In June, 1964, Atkins Library was ranked 33rd among the 63 academic libraries in North Carolina in terms of the number of volumes held. Sometime before the end of this semester the University library will rank eleventh on this scale.

"The Atkins Library may still be a fledgling among larger university libraries, but it has made amazing progress during the last two years," said head librarian, James Ramer.

During the school year immediately following the publication of the above statistics by the North Carolina State library, the then Charlotte College library added more volumes than all but five other college libraries in the state.

This brought the Atkins collection up to 31st in the state.

By the end of this semester, around 15,000 volumes will be added, pushing the library up to eleventh place with a total count of 60,000 volumes.

But it will be a long time before the ranking goes any higher.

The ten largest academic libraries in the state have collections in excess of 100,000 volumes.

"It will be several years before

UNC-C can reach their level of operation," said Ramer.

"In fact, our library is gaining on only Appalachian, Davidson, North Carolina College at Durham and North Carolina A & T College.

"Of the six other libraries, UNC at Greensboro, East Carolina, and Wake Forest are growing at a rate only slightly faster than ours, and North Carolina State at about twice our rate," he continued.

"UNC at Chapel Hill and Duke University add more volumes in a year than we own."
