Campus Bailed Out Of Water System Problem

By GAYLE WATTS

The unstable water system has been backed up by ten rubber water tanks made available by Major William R. Freeman of the Army National Guard.

The black rubber tanks, installed on campus October 11, are now tied into the university's water system, ready to push water into the system at times of peak use and to restore the pressure should it begin to fall.

A university maintenance man will check the pressure every hour during the day in UNC-C's 10,000 gallon storage tank.

Each of the water tanks holds 1,500 gallons of badly needed emergency water storage.

The City of Charlotte sent in a tanker Tuesday evening to fill the rubber tanks. "We can argue about the price later," said Water Department Chief Walter Franklin. The tanks will be refilled by the city whenever the water is used.

C. W. Gallant, Jr., a part-time student of engineering at UNC-C, mobilized the emergency resources. His firm, C. W. Gallant, Inc., was the low bidder at $10,693 for a 25,000 gallon metal storage tank for the campus. Mr. Gallant says his firm will proceed as quickly as possible in getting the larger metal tank in place.

Chancellor D. W. Colvard expressed appreciation to the city and county for "putting their resources at our disposal to help keep us supplied with water during our emergency."

Today's Urban Seminar Is First In Series Of 12

Today in the University Union the first in a series of twelve seminars begins at 9:30 a.m. continuing until 3:30 p.m. The theme of the seminar is: The transformation of new knowledge and research into urban policy and the uses of urbanization as a resource.

The speakers are Dr. John Asman, Chairman of the Brookings Institution, and Leo Molinaro, Executive Vice President of The West Philadelphia Corporation.

Key people in business, industry, local government and city planning throughout the Piedmont Crescent have been invited to participate. The purpose of the seminar is to study and discuss policies for the orderly development of an urbanized crescent.

As the result of last spring's forum, The Brookings Institution and a local business have combined efforts to present these seminars. The Brookings Institution makes available research studies and directs the seminars. The local business put up the money for the series.

Mrs. Winningham, Chairman of the University Forum Council, is cooperating with the Institution in making arrangements for the seminar on this campus.

The seminar will be held every three weeks beginning today, October 19 and continuing through June 13. Alternating groups will attend the meetings on Wednesday and Thursday.

Anderson Quips To Audience

By LIBBY HOLSHOUSER

Many students and faculty members enjoyed the dramatic presentation of John Stewart Anderson, which was given in the school ballroom Wednesday of last week. Mr. Anderson quipped before his performance that he had asked a famous British actress for advice upon the handling of American audiences. The actress's answer was, "Stand up, speak up, then shut-up!"

Mr. Anderson was able to establish immediate rapport between his audience and himself with the brief introductory remarks he made concerning his first presentation—a short oriental fable. He explained that this type presentation depended on one of three things: "(1) jokes about holy men, that's bad (2) jokes about the Lord, that's worse, and (3) jokes about women, and that's even worse." Mr. Anderson's tale fell into the first category (Continued on Page 4)
