

A Look at the RCs

In each dorm, in the apartment next to the reception desk, is the dorm's residence coordinators.

Residence coordinators have a variety of tasks. When the residence coordinator program was under the auspices of the Dean of Student's Office, their tasks were primarily with counseling and programming. Now, under the supervision of the Residence Life Office, they have added administrative functions to their duties.

The RC's are primarily interested in the students in their dorms, and concerned because so few students know of their function or their existence.

Marian Beane, the RC in Sanford, said that most of the students who know that the RCs exist think they are there to dispense keys. But, to become an RC, a master's degree in counseling or student personality is needed.

Tony Hughes of Dorm '72, now in his second year as a RC, said that he heard once that most people considered him to be somewhere between Peer Counseling and the Counseling Center.

Chuck Colby, the Moore RC, and Marcia Baroody, of Dorm '73, also stressed the fact that they are available to students if a serious problem arises.

Most students, they feel, will take their problems to the RA or go to their friends for advice. Most of the counseling the RC does takes place when the students problem is too much for the RA to handle, or when the problem is serious enough for the student to seek professional advice backed by some authority.

The RC's handle an incredible range of problems, from homesickness to drug overdoses. They advise student groups, who may come to them with some ideas on programming. For example, the dorm programs on socialism are student oriented. In Moore, Colby said, the students are getting together for a restoration program. Painting and getting furniture are two of the goals there.

All taught the course required for RA's last semester. Hughes teaches HDL 201 and works with the Counseling Center. Ms. Baroody is working on a child development center for children of UNCC students. Colby is on several university committees, and Ms. Beane is the foreign student advisor.

The RC's supervise the selection of the RA's and serve as consultants when the RA's have problems they can't handle.

They also supervise college work — study programs, handle security, and keep with the keys and dorm inventories.

Mostly, however, they work with groups and with counseling services.

On the programming side of the duties, several events are coming up thanks to the RC's.

Besides coffeehouses and films, a representative from the Peace Corps, a hypnotist, and a handwriting analyst will be visiting the dorms this semester. Plans are in the works for encounter groups, including a weekend marathon for couples.

A Letter

To the editor:

The UNCC Football Club is now opening its doors for all eligible people who are interested in participating. We are giving all students on campus a chance to play inter-collegiate club football. Also all upper classmen who are unable to play the spring season but still wish to play next fall must attend. We would like to fill a 40 man team and need a larger membership. Any student of the university, faculty member, or employee is eligible.

Date: Wednesday, Jan. 16

Time: 7:00 - 8:30

Place: Basement Moore

A Review

Almost four years have passed since the greatest force in musical recording history ceased to exist. The Beatles, dead as present recording stars, are still one of the most popular groups in the business. Their career is history as the Beatles, but each of the four members has gone separate ways since the split and have been surprisingly successful.

Paul McCartney was known as the baby-faced Beatle. While playing bass guitar on the early cuts, Paul sang lead on many of the records. In the later years, he played the piano and sung the majority of the songs. McCartney was not the single man behind the Beatles, one man could not have been, but he was one of the perfect ingredients that made the group.

With the Beatles, Paul's writing talent was not truly recognized. All songs were published under the authorship of Lennon and McCartney. However, the song most often attributed solely to McCartney is "Yesterday," a simple masterpiece with soft, meaningful lyrics.

Following the split, Paul was forced to work on his own. This brought about the production of two mediocre albums, McCARTNEY and RAM, which were accepted by true Beatles' fans but not by the remainder of the music world. However, singles released off of the two albums fared much better. "Maybe I'm Amazed" and "Uncle Albert/Admiral Halsey" had a slow rock style that has become characteristic of McCartney and did well on the charts.

McCartney, sensing that he was not a superstar on his own, sought to form another group. He joined with some old friends and his wife, the former Linda Eastman, to form Wings. Their first album was entitled WILD LIFE, yet it retained the sound Paul had used in his first two albums. One cut, "Love Is Strange" was appealing. The rest was second-rate rock.

However, Wings latest album, RED ROSE SPEEDWAY, is a masterpiece. McCartney has overcome his final hurdle and proven that he is capable of writing beautiful melodies in the style that made the Beatles famous. On the album, McCartney provides a variety of sounds including the smash hit single, "My Love." With this album, McCartney has shown the public that neither he nor the Beatles were flukes.
