The Doctor's Bag

Address questions to Dr. Arnold Werner, c/o Michigan State University, East Lansing, Mich.

Q: What causes sleepiness besides simple physical exhaustion? I often become sleepy in class, while reading, even while participating in sex. It doesn't seem to be related to the amount of sleep I had the night before. Sometimes I feel good all day after four hours of sleep, while other times I'm sleepy after eight hours.

A: Individual sleep requirements are a mysterious matter. About 90% of people usually need between 6 and 9 hours sleep to function well. There are a few people who function well on a continual basis with less than six hours sleep and there are some unusual people who require more than nine hours sleep a night. Often people who require a great deal of sleep are in good physical health but have emotional difficulties making it hard for them to face each day.

Sleepiness during the day is often a matter of how involved a person is with what they are doing and boring activities tend to increase drowsiness. It is not uncommon for people to feel very sleepy after eating as well. You are however, the only person I have heard of who complains of falling asleep during sex. Usually people feel sleepy or contented or relaxed after intercourse but are too involved to fall asleep during intercourse. There is a condition known as narcolepsy in which a person has episodic uncontrollable sleepiness which can occur anytime including during intercourse. Such a condition should be investigated by a physician experienced in dealing with these things; this is usually a neurologist.

Q: Several weeks ago my boyfriend and I engaged in anal sex. Since then I have had a bad case of constipation. Drug store laxatives seem to have no effect on me. I was wondering if my experience of a couple of weeks ago could possibly be related to my present difficulties as I have never been greatly constipated before.

A: Anal intercourse can result in a tearing of the skin that lines the anal sphincter which would result in painful defecation until such tears are healed up. Painful defecation almost inevitably leads to constipation. On the other hand, anxiety can work wonders in producing constipation and lasts a great deal longer than it takes for a superficial skin tear to heal.

Anal intercourse without the use of a condom carries with it a very real risk of urethral infection in the man; serious vaginal or bladder infections in the woman can occur if genital intercourse follows under these circumstances.

Q: I always had a very satisfactory sexual relationship with my former girlfriend. But, I cannot warm up to my present girl although I like her very much.

A: What are the reasons? Is there a difference in the chemistry of our bodies that prevents me from getting sexually aroused by her?

A: Our relationships with all people are multifaceted. The type of friendship or closeness we have with a particular person is obviously determined by personality factors, but may also be affected by such things as common interests, physical or sexual appeal, necessity, need and convenience. Like you, I too am puzzled why some relationships just don't seem to go even though all the apparent elements of success are present. Equally as confusing, but more fun to contemplate and be involved in, are the relationships that seem to start with an instantaneous closeness and understanding, almost as if there is some sort of chemical or physical reaction between the people involved. If there is any chemistry in all of this, it is hormonal, not under voluntary control and not related to chemical differences between you and your friend.

Warmth, closeness and a satisfactory sexual relationship usually takes some time to develop but, at times it never develops; this leads to a tricky situation. I have become convinced that a lot of unmarried people hang in with relationships which have serious defects along one dimension or another. Rather than accept the fact that a relationship with a particular person might have a serious defect in one area even though worthwhile in other areas, people hold together in the hope or belief that eventually the relationship will become more complete. When the missing factor is something as basic as sexual feelings or involves personality styles, a couple might be better off either terminating the relationship or maintaining it as one that will not lead to any permanent arrangement.

Many people I have spoken to who have become divorced cite serious and obvious defects in the relationship that existed before marriage and which both parties hoped would disappear. It is my own opinion that people who take advantage of the time they are single to become involved in multiple relationships and feel free to find out who they are and what they need, have a much more likely chance of eventually marrying someone compatible with them. To remain involved in a serious relationship in which one cannot feel sexually close to one's partner is destined for trouble.
