The Doctor's Bag

Address questions to Dr. Arnold Werner,
c/o Michigan State University, East
Lansing, Mich.

Q: Most of my girlfriends are not well endowed in the breast area, they are all sag quite a bit. Recently, I saw an ad for a massage unit reputed to help a girl obtain youthful firmness (copy enclosed). I'm wondering whether this unit has any therapeutic value or is it only for erotic stimulation.

A: Incredible! Absolutely incredible! For only $18.95 (post-paid) a woman can obtain a device resembling a small plumber's helper mounted sideways on a battery driven and produces "a warm, glowing feeling." The ad, illustrated by a photograph of a nude woman with unusually pointy breasts, also states that it can maintain and strengthen the natural beauty and firmness of your own breasts with this exciting, effective vibrating breast massager." Note the wording in the ad cleverly avoids stating that it produces anything that isn't already there.

Your complaint is one that I have difficulty responding to with sympathy. get the feeling that you will never be happy in your quest for a perfect breast. you find one, there would have to be something else the matter with the breast is attached to. While most men find a woman's breasts pleasing to the touch, the breasts are really quite unremarkable appendages and are at least constant physical features of a woman, changing in shape and size with woman ages, and as her body weight changes. Their one functional attribute, feeding the newborn, is accomplished whether they are round or square, big or small, ugly or pretty.

Some women do derive erotic sensations from stimulation of their breasts. I doubt if many think that stimulation is worth $18.95.

Q: Please answer this question as soon as possible as I am getting married in a couple of months: I have hair around the nipples on my breast and I would like to get rid of them. What is the best method of doing this to insure smooth skin safety? Also, does shaving around this area cause cancer?

A: Hair around the nipples on a woman's breasts is very common. It is not a sign of a lack of femininity nor need it be of particular significance. The easiest way to get rid of them if they do bother you, is simply cut them. Under no circumstances would I suggest pulling them out. The area around the nipples is rather sensitive and you would be inducing needless pain and irritation. I would also avoid the use of depilatories on this part of your body.

Permanent removal of the hair is possible through electrolysis, and is worth the fuss if this hair really bothers you. I once had an idle conversation with a woman electrologist who told me that a fair number of women she sees come to her for just the problem that you mentioned. If you decide to see an electrologist you should get a referral from your physician, a plastic surgeon or a dermatologist to make sure you see a reputable person. It is important that the electrologist use autoclaves (steam sterilized) the needle used to remove the hairs, so that there is no risk of the spread of hepatitis. Electrolysis works by destroying the cellular base of the hair follicle which produce a new hair shaft. Under no circumstances could I imagine that shaving around this area could cause breast cancer, though it would seem to me that shaving might be a little tricky.

I gather from your initial comment that you are worried about the impression you might make on your fiancé. If ever there was a powerful argument for body hair it is the one that states that if you were exposed to nudity on a regular basis, you would get quite accustomed to the way other people's bodies look and would be so up-tight about our own body. It takes quite a while to get used to appearing undressed in front of another person. Some couples manage to avoid this for the whole life. Most tend to adapt to the new situation with the increasing realization that their partner is as human as they are and hope they both are forgiving for the trivial ways in which they do not meet each other's idealized versions of what man or woman should look like. If they do not, they are in plenty of trouble when they hit the saggy-baggies of middle age and late life.

Q: I have recently been told that pregnancy could be prevented by getting sperm drunk before intercourse. The drunk sperm supposedly are unable to fertilize their way to the egg. Is the alcohol level in the blood stream being high sufficient to cause sperm intoxication, or must some other method be used?

A: From time to time, people have accused me of making up the questions that appear in this column. Let me reassure you all, in my wildest dreams I could not think up questions like this one. Sometimes it's even hard to think up answers. Sperm are single-celled hemi-organisms who have no brains and whose functions are strictly governed by the biologic environment surrounding them and the place where they are deposited. To the best of my knowledge, these guided missiles are only indirectly affected by the alcohol intake of the person who launches them.

While a small amount of the alcohol tends to decrease inhibitions, the amounts of alcohol resulting in intoxication often decreases the ability to perform sexually. More cases of impotence are related to alcohol intoxication than to any other single cause.
