Fees Panel Starts Budget Hearings

By Ray Gronberg

The Student Activity Fees Commission held its preliminary budget hearings last week, hearing the spending proposals of the University Program Board, the campus media and student government.

The total of the requests came to $263,876. The amount available for allocation, based on projected 1981-82 enrollment, has not been estimated yet. It will probably be less than the amount requested by the three organizational branches, so the hearings began to determine what requests will be cut.

Of the total, UPB is asking for the largest chunk, $106,225 for its operations next year, plus $4000 to improve the Jam Up site and $4500 to replace funds for summer programming that had to be diverted to help pay for Jam Up.

Charles Simms, UPB chair, says the capital outlay request for the Jam Up site is necessary because "a lot of bands won't play there."

He listed the priorities for work on the site to include landscaping on the hill overlooking the stage and the addition of sound wings, to stack large pieces of outdoor concert equipment on.

The addition of a covering for the stage is further down the road, Simms said. Not having a cover makes the site a less-than-desirable place for bands to play. Also, he said there is a need for a lighting system there, so events could be held at night.

Simms asked the commission to give UPB an additional $4500, because, he said, the budgets earmarked for summer and new student orientation programming were spent on Jam Up.

UPB was supposed to cosponsor the event with the Residence Hall Association, but conflicts lead to a situation where "there was no way in the world we could program this together."

UPB therefore had to pick up all of the costs itself, resulting in the budget overrun.
