Student Union Center Nears Completion

Some people will try anything. It must have taken a pretty vivid imagination to visualize the shack located in the northwest corner of Central's athletic field as a student union building. But that is just what a group of CC students did. Not only that—they proceeded to do something about it.

The work of converting the decrepit building into a student union center began several weeks ago. The entire building had to have a going over from floor to roof. The floor was incomplete in part of the building, so it was necessary to pour concrete in the unfinished portion. The glass was completely missing from the windows, and the building had no doors. The interior of the building had never been finished—some kind of wall material had to be installed. One of the biggest and most important items on the conversion program was providing electric lighting.

The student union backers obtained a small grant from the student council to carry on their work. The amount was far short of total cost of renovating the building; however, lack of ingenuity not being among the failings of the CC students, the necessary materials were obtained.

At this writing the work on the building is incomplete, but it looks as if a party will be held in the building before the close of school.

The students are particularly indebted to Dr. Hechenbleikner and to Mr. Bill Huss, local contractor, without whose help and advice the student union project would have been impossible.

Our photographer dropped by the building the other evening and caught a group of the students at work. The photos in the upper left and lower right show the exterior and interior of the building at the time the work began. The pictures in the top row show J. Sherrill shampooing a door in preparation for a coat of paint and Hugh Adams soaping up the floor for the deck swabbers. In the bottom row, Hydraulic Engineer Dorsey McIlroy makes with the hose while Jo Mihalic scrubs one of the lighting fixtures.
