A COUNTRY SONG.

- An evening so clear I would that I were, To kiss thy soft cheek
 With the faintest of air.
 The star that is twinkling
- So brightly above, I would that I were
- To enlighten my love. I would I were heaven, O'erarching and blue,
- I'd bathe thee, my dearest In freshest of dew. ould I the sun were, All radiance and glow I'd pour all my splendor On thee, love, below!
- If I were the waters That round the world run, I'd lavish my pearls on thee,
- Not keeping of one. If I were the summer, My flowers and green I'd heap on thy temples, And crown thee my Queen.
- If I were a kiln, All fire and flame, I'd mantle and girdle thee Round with the same.
 But as I am nothing
 Save love-mazed Bill,
 Pray take of me, make of me

Just what you will. MORALITY AS IT IS.

"THE BEST."

It is easy to say of anything, especially of a medicine, that it is "the best"; but to show the reason of its superlogity to the satisfaction of the public, may be quite another matter. When we affirm, however, that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any other blood medicine, we make no inconsiderate statement. but tell the plain, unvarnished truth. Other so-called blood-purifiers may produce a temporary exhilaration, which is mistaken for cure; but the cures effected by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla are radical and permanent. It not only purifies the blood, but renews and invigorates that fluid.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla hus been in uso for the better part of half a century, and has achieved a success which is without parallel in the history of medicine. People early learned to appreciate its value as a purifier of the blood, and the lapse of years has only confirmed and strengthened the popular opinion Only the choicest and most approved ingredients enter into the composition of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and these are secured regardless of cost. It is on this principle that the Honduras sarsaparilla. root is exclusively used in this preparation. The domestic variety is cheap and abundant, being indigenous all over the American continent, but it has little medicinal value compared with the richer growth of the tropics. Therefore it is that the extract of the Honduras root, solely, forms the basis of Ayer's preparation, the other ingredients being stillingia, podophyllum, yel-low dock, and the todiales of potassium and iron.

The effect produced by these ingredients depends largely upon the proportions used, and it is only by the greatest skill in compounding them that the remarkable alterative and tonic qualities of Ayer's Sursuperilla are secured. The appliances of Ayer's laboratory are unique and costly, and experience shows that their use results in preducing a compound extract of far more curative power than can obtained by any other methods. "I" liberal, and original most ode of advectising, readily accounts for the world-wide reputation and enviable sources of
