

A real student of the great question of national finance would do no wonder in the national machinery to accumulate wealth and noise himself well or draw into the current of enthusiasm for, or the currents of violence against either the other or the opposition theories. The discussion of the great silver question is entered into by so many with more zeal than logic, with more effort to shew the antagonist than to give a reason for the faith that is in them. If a strong argument is made, for want of refutation, some inconsistency in the author is hunted for with the hope, not unof neutralizing his force. A great number of adherents on one or the other side is expected to have much weight, when every one knows that the majority of us do not fully understand the question but believe one theory because we are prejudiced against the other.

The Democratic platform of 1860 appealed to each side of their favorable decision, whereas it clearly demands the use of both silver and gold, but at a parity. If free coinage could work a disparity, the platform condemns free silver, if not, it sanctions it. Very many of us know positively and unequivocally, but we are on different sides. We know that it will and we know that it won't. And more than likely if we found it and everything else unfavorable, we would not care a hoot, for we believe it because we believe it. As for a man for whom we have ever cast a vote it is just simply an outrage to him to oppose us, and we shall believe nobly but a fool would ever cast a vote for such a member. Statesmen of our early national existence are called up for confirmation of our views and their utterings on topics not quite similar to ours are only caught by ears that like the photographer's plate, are especially adapted to receive certain impressions, but to bind up the ear catcher it is positive and the other as negative. The manufacturer has the gold standard, the Democratic is Democratic and that only, the others less clearly that if you do not favor free silver you have no part nor lot with Democracy. The one who says you are not honest to demand such an absurd thing as the other would say you are bought for a price. Each would blind up the other to the scorn of the world for boozing at the Chicago convention when the decision is again such opponents; which it is sure to be. All this exists in the Democratic family, and that on, after the humiliating fact that such is responsible for the separation two years ago of many good and noble-spirited citizens, who were overcome with imaginary evils and vainly sought better affiliations. Now is the interest of peace and for the only possible hope for the triumph of principles we claim for the betterment of our national home with all that is embraced in the idea of home, can we not in a brotherly way give our reasons for believing as we do and for getting our fellow men to believe with us and at the same time remember that others may condescendingly differ with us. How desirable that we should go to the Chicago convention with him, but moderate bearing toward our own convictions, with a willingness to abide its decisions!

THE STANDARD does not wish to be understood as being on a pivot, but to verify our position as a believer in platinism with a gold standard basis, or belied to embrace the opposite if we are found in error, we are giving the subject a close study. But we find so much of unfair assertions, sligmatizing epithets, and unkind thrusts, that we feel mortified pleading for harmonious relations in the Democratic ranks than we do for the adoption of views we believe to be correct, for after all if the worst must come there will be about the same for all to suffer, and if the better is to prevail all may enjoy it if they will. We honestly think, though, that the strong arguments presented to our view have been invaluable to the limited course of silver.

We hear a great deal about our money system as defective, inadequate, monstrous and criminal with an implied promise that the free coinage of silver would be the panacea for all our financial ills. It is deplorable enough that the gold reserve is constantly diminishing from our national treasury. It is alarming enough that our national debt is increasing instead of decreasing. But who is able to repair the damages of an abnormally agitated people. It is task enough for our statesmen to save the ship of state through smooth channels into a haven of prosperity, but when the public mood is fanatical, frenzied by mindless agitation, till a patriot is unchained above a storm, we accord to ministers their perfect right to consider, entertain, and expedite, but we would not quote them as authority. Since it tends to draw down on their heads disaster and the opposition showed that he as well as many of us was ignorant of the true significance of the gold reserve. Wall street and the money makers catch it roundly from certain classes of our political elements but the Democrats in 1860 were defeated largely by such loss of money as bought many votes in some sections of the union together with a native inconsistency that led so disastrously to the cause of Democracy. The Republicans under Mr. Harrison were able to turn all talk of a surplus in the treasury, and to, in open Congress much loss of pension and extravagant appropriations as would remove all necessity for another message like Mr. Cleveland's famous one of 1888. And now we are grounding under the consequences and the Democracy and Mr. Cleveland are abashed those very men who should have stayed with and have helped us to avert the very evils of which they so loudly complained. Even more they actually fused with those who were logically their worst political enemies to defeat us in whose ranks they formerly stood and against whom their first great complaint was that we were not Democratic enough. And now shall the tailored and bleeding gies of Democracy waste their powder on the phantom of free coinage instead of marching to victory under the banner of sound money, tariff for revenue and states rights not detrimental to our national compact?

In all candor we feel that there are too many good men in our country and State who were unduly excited and induced to sever their relation with the Democratic party in the late general election. We have nothing to offer for their return but a most hearty welcome with a willingness to let goes be by gone. While the party is not faultless, surely one seeking the soundest political principle and the highest political virtue would not leave the Democratic ranks for those of any other party existing among us. If a man finds he made an error in leaving the party he should not do himself and friends the wrong to remain away. To make a wrong step anybody may do, but it is the mark of the highest degree of manhood to retract that step when the error is seen. A force strong enough to effect our defeat ought to yield power enough to correct our errors which are surely less potent than in any other party. Then why not be a part of the party that has given us, if not perfection, surely the best Senate, State and national government that we have enjoyed since the war? To return to us in good faith means success and triumph for the principles you surely hold dear. To array yourselves against us to weaken our hands and your own and secure the triumph of such political economy as is suited to most of the masses and especially to the South.

Fredrick Cleveland, on May 6th extended the provisions of the Civil Service 30,000 more government employees, increasing the number from 55,730 to 85,135. This embraces nearly all officials below the line where confirmation of the Senate is required and above mere laborers who require little other than muscular skill. If no new avenue is found to bring evil out of good this will certainly bring much relief to the appointing power. When public office is wanted there is generally much dissatisfaction on the part of those who fail to get one. Their easier position and above a lowering of respect to some one. This Civil Service principle is consistent, we believe, with most professions and certainly with the President's practice.

An exchange says Senator Hill of New York, is not a man entirely after one's own heart, but who can't admit the way in which he has stood up against the most singular methods of Peleg and his allies, who have for months been seeking to keep the officers upon whom the American people have cast their greatest honor, solely for the sake of making material with which to gorge the insatiable thirst of their own followers, to whom a contamination against somebody high in trust is as breath to their nostrils.

The McKinley boom has swept almost as a tidal wave over the land, till few if any doubt that he will be nominated at St. Louis. His name stands up as the champion of a tariff system that draws from every man woman and child in the nation, a tribute graded highest on the basis of its consumption always riding out the brigandage and banditry of all the death and scourge the world over caused by consumption. Many things were once considered impossible. It would be strange if medical science did not make some progress. The telegraph and telephone, the phonograph, the electric light—all were once impossible and once it was impossible to cure consumption. That was before the time of Dr. Pierce's Golden Seal Discovery. Take a according to directions this standard remedy will cure 98 per cent of all cases of consumption. Consumption is cured and restored by the power of alkalis in the blood—nobody need be the least remedy that can be had for the disease, and I heartily recommend to all who have horses or stock of any kind solid healthy flesh and vigorous strength.

The Republican party has prospered in its erratic methods for many years through somebody's ability to divert the attention of the masses from an imaginary and impractical source of evil.

The Boy and His Dream.

The Durham Sun says a little boy of six was crying for a dream. The household objected to the noise. But one night after he had gone to bed, he was heard to pray like this:

"I'm mounting no alcohol or opium in my room and I am always clean even when great to take care of."

Now I lay me down to sleep—I want a dream.

I pray the Lord my soul to keep—I want a dream.

If I should die before I wake—I want a dream.

I pray the Lord my soul to take care of me—I want a dream.

We depend on it he got the dream.

Snow-Goats.

May I offer you a stick of gum?" asked the travelling man in the tall cap, by way of introducing himself to the passenger in the seat directly in front of him.

The man turned around, looked at the proffered gum, and shook his head.

"I beg you, pardon," he said, "I manufacture that gum." I never allow it. But if you will join me, I will open this box of candy I bought just before I got on the train."

The traveling man looked at the label on the box and shuddered.

"We make that candy," he remarked, shrugging his shoulders.

"I never touch it!"

Subsequently they became better acquainted over a small bottle, of whose contents they possessed some of the secrets of manufacture.—New York Sun.

Murder Holmes Hanged.

PHILADELPHIA, May 7.—Murderer Horace W. Higginson, alias H. H. Holmes, was hanged this morning in the county prison for the killing of Benjamin F. Fleischman.

The drop fell at 12:30 o'clock and twenty minutes later he was pronounced dead by the prison officials, Dr. Sharp and Dr. Batchar.

The execution was in every way devoid of any sensational features. To the last he was self-possessed and controlled, even to the extent of giving a word of advice to Assistant Superintendent Richardson, as the latter was arranging the final details. He died as he had lived, unconcerned and thoughtful, apparently, in the future, even while the recollection still vividly before him of the recent confession, in which he admitted the killing of a score of persons of both sexes in all parts of the country. He left everything, and, almost his last words were a plain blank denial of any crimes committed, except the death of the woman in his bands from malpractice.

Dear Sirs, G. C. Bradbury, N. C.

Gentlemen:—A short time since one of my horses ran into scratches so very bad that his leg became swollen and very much inflamed. I used a few bottles of Mexican Liniment and the inflammation and scratches soon disappeared, leaving my horse as good as ever. This is the best remedy that can be had for the disease, and I heartily recommend to all who have horses or stock of any kind solid healthy flesh and vigorous strength.

Truly yours, J. W. DUNN.
