government when the revenues are definient, or when our gold supply is being rapidly exhausted because of distrust in the financial policy of the government. Thus the House in one day gave the wildest exhibition of waste of public money, and the Senate on the same day gave the wildest exhibition of the purpose of that body to deny the government the n cessary means to maintain its credit and preserve the honor of the republic.

That only five Senators had the manhood or patriousm to oppose the passage of the river and barbor bill yesterday over the President's veto but emphasized the record made the day before in both the Senate and the House.
