CONCORD, MARCH 10, 1897.

THE LEASE STANDS.

Through all the wrangle the lease of the North Carolina railroad stands. The House Monday night tabled the Grant substitute.

Owing to the ugly spirit manifested by the governor, and the amount of alienation he has succeeded in effecting, it is doubtful whether he can raise a breeze of much force two years from now, if not restrained.

The wild extremes and bitter vindictiveness attaching to most of the governor's so-called reform movements very naturally silenced the more conservative who might have favored a modification, especially for the sake of unity and harmony. Extremists defeat themselves.

The trade was immensely profitable compared with the former history of the road and with what would have been the consequences of its falling a prey to our very inglorious legislature.

It is well that this important interest at least did not get within their grasp. But it does not end here and this agitation is of course a menace to business prosperity, and must result in injury as far below the line of right to all concerned as the evils complained of in the agitation.

The last act in this drama is an injunction issued by Judge Simon against Gov. Russell, Attorney General Walser and others to restrain them from further agitating the breaking of the lease.

The parties referred to are cited to appear at Greensboro on the first Monday in April.

Behind this too is the Central Trust Company of New York suing out an injunction against the Southern and the North Carolina railroad to secure the safety of bonds held by it and as trustees to prevent such actions as would endanger the security of their claims.

Thus the movement in which envy, spite, jealousy and political hate formed so conspicuous a motive power, has brought immense distraction and much less and is likely to end in litigation, not more though than it seems our governor might delight in.

EXHIBITION "TO SET."

Rev. McCulloch Invited—A Pretty Store—New Enterprises—Other Notes.

The college boys say that they are going to have a "prep" exhibition "to set," this year. We understand that Rev. H. A. McOullough has been invited to deliver the literary address before the societies at commencement.

The Pi Sigma Phi Society will hold their annual public exercises on the night of April 15.

The Misses Fisher have opened a millinery parlor in the old drug store building. They have new and attractive line of goods. Their establishment is decidedly the prettiest in town.

The past week has been a busy one. Three new business enterprises have sprung into existence. Then who says that our town is not growing?

This (Monday) morning the team of Mr. Luther Lentz, while left standing on the street, became frightened and made an attempt to run when they collided with the public well, almost demolishing the structure. No serious damage, however.

The convicts passed through town this evening. They take up headquarters near Mr. Harris Crowell's. The people of this section have been trying for some time to get their services, as they are needed very much.

Mr. W. G. Barringer is spending several days at New London and Gold Hill.

Mr. A. W. Moose is thinking of securing the agency for bicycles. He says that the profits which would be derived from the increase in the sale of ointments for bruises, would be quite lucrative.

Stevenson On the Outlook.

Ex-Vice President Stevenson and wife, who arrived in Chicago last night, spent Sunday at the Palmer House. Mr. Stevenson expressed himself pleased with the prospects of leaving the cares of public affairs, and said he believed a life of retirement will not prove an unpleasant change.

"I was very favorably impressed with my successor, Vice President Hobart," said Mr. Stevenson. "He is a pleasant and an able man, and I am sure will fill the office with honor and success.

"Mr. Gage is taking well at Washington. His popularity will help him to overcome many obstacles. The Senate will undoubtedly recognize the principle of arbitration, as President McKinley suggests."

Mr. Stevenson will return to his home, Bloomington, Ill., tomorrow. —Chicago Dispatch, 7th.
