Damage by the Flood.

It is impossible to estimate accurately the damage which has been done by the recent floods in the Mississippi valley and elsewhere in the United States, but the agricultural department at Washington has published a report which indicates the immense extent of these disasters. The report is based on the fullest information that could be obtained, and is brought down to April 6. At that date the total flooded area was given at 15,800 square miles, of which about 8,000 square miles of territory was in Mississippi, 4,500 in Arkansas, 1,750 in Missouri, 1,200 in Tennessee and a small amount in Louisiana. This region contained, in 1890, about $58,000 people. Of these 186,000 were in Mississippi, 100,000 in Arkansas and the remainder are distributed in Missouri and Tennessee.

It is estimated that the flooded district contains 39,500 farms. The total value of these farms, distributed in four States, is put at $65,000,000. The live stock on these farms reached a value of $7,500,000, with farm products on hand to the amount of $3,750,000 more.

This submerged region produced last year about $370,000 bales of cotton, valued at close on $13,000,000; over 11,000,000 bushels of corn, worth about $3,400,000, and wheat, oats, potatoes and hay worth over $800,000 more.

These figures, great as they are, doubtless do not represent anything like the loss direct and consequential which the floods have inflicted upon the country.—Atlanta Journal of 13th.

Tribute to Bright Eyes.

The author of the following lines, Dr. I W Jones, of Salisbury, though he has passed his three-score years and ten, has grown old only in years. His heart is still young, his mind clear and his imagination active:

Ne'er till I saw your beauteous eyes
Did I regret that I'd grown old;
For in their depths, a paradise
Of love and truth, I could behold—

Those depths of untold love, to view
At morn, at noon and eventide,
Would be enough to quite renew
The youth that years have cast aside—

And though my face may have grown old,
My heart is young and true,
And in its rosebuds will unfold,
And bloom alone for you.

Could I but find the mystic spring
That Ponce De Leon sought;
To drink of it could never bring
The change your charms have wrought.

And if my barque of life should ride
On some tempestuous sea,
I care not if it never lands,
Unless it land with thee.

—Salisbury Sun.

Stole Rice.
Herman Sechler, whose attempt to elope with his best girl, Miss Annie Rice, but was interfered with by the girl's big bud as told by THE STANDARD last week has at last succeeded as might have been expected and has his bonnie bride all his own. Herman says he never did steal anything but Rice.

Well we think Herman should not be punished for that. Rice that combines lassness with it is too tempting to be resisted under the spell of Cupid's wand. The youthful groom and the Rice that is no longer Rice have our very best wishes.
