JAKE NEWELL GONE.

He Mysteriously Disappeared from His Boarding House and Work April 24, Leaving No Trace Behind.

Jake Newell has mysteriously disappeared from his boarding house in Philadelphia, leaving no trace behind him.

For more than a year Jake had been employed in the book publishing house of P. W. Zeigler & Co., and was highly esteemed by his employers. On Saturday, April 24th, Jake did not show up at his place of business as usual and has not since been heard from. The gravest fears are entertained by his friends. Mr. Ed. F. White received a telegram from Mr. Newell's employers, asking if anyone here knew of his whereabouts and to notify his people at once of his disappearance.

Mr. W. G. Newell, Jake's father, was in the city Thursday night on his way to Philadelphia to help search for his missing boy.

Wednesday's Philadelphia Times contained the following:

"J. F. Newell, 25 years old, has been missing from his boarding house, 710 Franklin street, since last Friday a week. On April 23 he left his boarding house ostensibly to go to Atlantic City, to return in a week. He did not return. The police of Atlantic City have been notified and are looking for the young man.

"No suspicions were entertained by his friends until they discovered in his room yesterday a note which read: 'In emergency telegraph to Flows, North Carolina.' Flows, North Carolina, is his home. It is not known how much money he had with him when he left. He was employed by P. W. Zeigler & Co., publishers, and he left without drawing his pay, which was due. His reputation at his place of business has always been of the best. He was a steady, conscientious worker and was not a drinking man. Fears of foul play are entertained."

Cabarrus, Rowan and Stanly.

The health reports for April appeared in the bulletin as follows:
Cabarrus—Dr. Robt. S. Young, Concord. Sixty-two cases of whooping cough and two of diphtheria. Pneumonia and mild malarial attacks in all parts.

Rowan—Dr. John Whitehead, Salisbury. Five cases of typhoid fever. Pneumonia and malarial fever.

Stanly—Dr. D. P. Whitley, Millington. A few cases of whooping cough and one of typhoid fever. I have suggested to the commissioners the necessity of rebuilding at the county home, but the county is heavily in debt, and as yet no thing has been done.

WAS IT A PROPOSAL?

The Lady Was Positive About It, But the Lawyer Didn't See It that Way.

"You've heard the story of that breach of promise case in Connecticut," laughed the lawyer whose practice shows him a good many family skeletons. "A fine looking young fellow calling on a spinster asked when there would be but 25 letters in the alphabet. She gave it up and he told her, 'when U and I are one.' Making the wish father to the thought, she declared this a proposal of marriage on his part, but the court did not confirm her construction of his answer to the conundrum.

"Last summer I had a woman to come to me who was bent on securing heavy damages as a balm to her wounded and lacerated affections. She informed me that the man whom she wanted made defendant had not only paid her a great deal of attention, but had actually proposed to her. Then he had cruelly deserted her and made another woman his wife.

"By dint of questioning, for unsupported statements want looking into with woman clients, I learned that the alleged attention had been chiefly on her part. She fluttered about him whenever and wherever there was an opportunity. After she had answered evasively several times I spoke sternly and told her that it was absolutely necessary that she tell just what he said when he proposed for her hand.

"Well," she answered hesitatingly. "I asked him one evening if he ever intended to marry. He answered that he did. Then he put the same question to me, and I made the same reply. 'Now we have both agreed to marry,' I exclaimed, and rushed into his arms. Instantly he changed his mind, said that I misunderstood him, and cruelly left me alone. It was not a month before the invitations for his wedding were out."

"You haven't the shadow of a case, I said curtly.

"I know better, she snapped, as she swept from the office. She hired a pettifogger and paid out a goodly sum for the privilege of making a fool of herself."—Detroit Free Press.
