There is a lull in the war storm that may break in the furiousness of i's wrath at any moment, yet it may be delayed. The Spanish fleet is somewhere in the Carribean Sea, and of course is depending upon strategic manœuvres rather than a

The Oregon and the Flying Squadron will soon he ready to cooperate with Rear Admiral Sampson, and together they may succeed in bagging the Spanish fleet, yet there is a good large stretch of gaps through which Cervers may escape. Madrid, 1.07 p. m -A dispatch It is necessary for Sampson to keep up the blockade and watch well to preyent Cervera from getting into Cuba. The situa ion is baffling, no doubt, to our wisest strategists.

Heretofore our newspapers, to be always ahead, have kept the Spanish pretty we l informed as to our movements. Now the Secretary says that things that have occurred shall be promptly given out by the bulle ins, but such news as the movements which it is not desirable for the Spaniards to know must be kept from the public

The navy department still hopes to succeed yet in getting an exchange of the two newspaper re porters that were captured at Cardenas.

The ass gnment of command rs has been made, and Gen. Lee goes to Tampa, presumably to be one of the division commanders in the Cuban expedition. Gen. Merritt is assigned to the Philippine Islands, though he is dissatisfied with the program. Of the 15,000 troops allowed him he wants at least 4,000 regulars instead of 1,000, and expresses a determination to decline the command if his ideas are not complied with.
