He charged that when "Peg Leg" Smith tried to get negroes to go from North Carolina to Mississippi the Democrats objected and passed a law against it. (To this Mr. Klutz said in rejoinder that Smith tried to take the bands in crop time, which was an interference. Beside, he tried to get the able bodied men and leave the dependent.)

He tried very hard to make it appear that Democrats had gotten round Mr. S J Hartsell and had dictated and had even written that letter. He was completely floored in every attempt. He closed his speech in a tirade against the use of the affair as he said for political purposes.

Mr. Caldwell attempted to spring upon Mr. Klutz some new matter in his last retort that by the rules he could not do, as Mr. Klutz could have no chance to reply to them. He was promptly called down. We need not tell our readers that Mr. Caldwell ranted. He went through all kinds of gyrations, dashing over the stage, stooping and working his fingers, hands and arms and literally braced himself up with boldness and vocal force. We do him the justice to say that he is more expert than a great many speakers in witty retorts and a power to keep a bold front in championing a cause that ought to hang his head in humiliation after all that was contended for and not realized by fusion. He made some fairly learned and admirable oratorical flights at the close of his speech by way of scolding about things he could not answer.

Robbed the Grave
A startling incident of which Mr. John Oliver, of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—kept on gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying 'Electric Bitters,' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the other victim." No one should fail to try them Only 50 cents per bottle at P. B. Fetzer's Drug Store.
