But His Was Not Drink as the Lecture Supposed.

"Habit, habit, habit, how it binds a man with chains of iron!" exclaimed the Temperance Lecturer out of a Job, "And that's right, too," commented the Son of Toil.

"Ah, my friend, you seem to have had some experience with habits," said "You bet I have," replied the other. 'That's what causes all the misery of

The Question Was Answered Loud talking in public places, such as restaurants and public conveyances, is more of a European than an American custom, says the New York Herald, but occasionally you meet Amercans, or persons born in this country of foreign parents, who have that European habit strongly developed. Sometimes this habit occasions embarrassment-to those who indulge in it. A woman dressed gaudily and in a way that did not comport with her yearsfor she was in the neighborhood of two score, while her attire would have been more appropriate for a girl of seventeen-entered a Broadway car at Herald square a few days ago. It was evident from her attire that she had an object in concealing her age. Her escort was about thirty-five years old. Their actions denoted that she was either his sweetheart or trying to be. The woman talked very loudly; her escort answered very quietly. Everybody in theicar could hear every word she said. When the car reached Fortyfirst street she announced: "My birthday will be to-morrow."

"Indeed!" replied the escort. "I am glad you have imparted the information. It will give me the op-" "Now see if you are a good guesser, Guess how many," she interrupted. "Oh, I wouldn't like to try."

"Go on. Guess how many." "Forty-second!" cried the conductor. The passengers struggled to suppress aughter. The woman's escort smiled, but the woman looked angry. "Let's get out!" she said softly--the only thing she had not said loudly.

Her Experience Was Small. Here is a story that takes the chromo indeed, and without any apparent ef-

During the holiday week a young lady from Collamer came to town to visit some friends. She is a very pretty with her. He asked her to go to see Della Fox with him on New Year's night, and she gladly consented. She dressed up very nicely for the occa-sion, and she looked as chipper as a three-season belle to the young men who was escorting her. She enjoyed the opera, and spoke quite intelligently upon the score and the libretto, until the young man thought that she could not be a farmer girl after all. "Would you like a little supper when the play is over?" he asked her when the curtain went down in the second

EFFECT OF FREE SILVER ON THE COST OF LIVING.

Doubling the Volume of Money Would Really Add but $50 to $1,000-Circulating Medium Actually Lowered 4 1-2 Per Cent-Facts to Ponder.

This whole agitation in behalf of free silver is made, it seems to me, honestly and sincerely by a large body of our fellow citizens in other parts of the country and some of them in this part of the country. I desire to give them the greatest credit for sincerity in their belief. I wish to testify that from my acquaintance with a large number of these people I have failed to find that any considerable number wish to do a wrong or to deal unjustly by any other portion of our people. They do feel that there are certain evils from which they wish to escape, and it has been suggested to them that by some legerdemain of government dealing with our currency that they could escape from the evils of which they complain.

Now, the chief evil of this complaint is low prices. Now, nobody ever really complains of low prices when he wants to buy anything, and nobody who has anything to sell ever complains of high prices. But we find that communities as a whole combine all their energies to make prices as a whole low. Individual members of every community are laboring to make prices of particular things they want to sell high, but when communities act together they are trying to make prices low.

But if this be true; if the general effort of communities is to make prices low; if that is the reason that we have granted railroad charters in order to bring the products of the distant parts of the country to our doors at low prices; if that is the reason we built the Erie canal; if that is the reason that we have made transportation on the Erie canal absolutely free, taxing the people of the state in order that it may be free; if that is the reason that we have built our highways and made them free; if that is the reason that we are doing a thousand and one other things-then why in the name of reason should government be appealed to to do something about one thing in order to make prices high?

Why, in regard to this one thing, should there be a grand exception to all the other things that a government does in and about our affairs and our products and the things that we buy and sell?

I do not concede that it would be to our advantage as a whole that government could double the price of our bread tomorrow. And yet this is the proposition that is made. I doubt if in this city you could find a dozen votes outside of the bakers' shops in favor of doubling the price of bread tomorrow. And yet that is the great thing that underlies this argument. Why, I see that Senator Stewart said the other day that young men were not marrying so much now as they used to because we did not have Free silver-what will it do, according to Senator Stewart? Why, it will make that young man if he contemplated matrimony expect to have all the expenses of his household, from his bride's outfit and the new coat he bought for the ceremony and so on through all his domestic arrangements even to the baby's cradle, made more dear. Do you think that would be an inducement to matrimony? Then they say that the amount of money regulates prices. Does it have any great effect upon prices if it is good money?

All the time we hear, and I believe that it is uncontradicted, that about 5 per cent of all the transactions of the people of this country are made in money. All the rest of the transactions are made with the other media-checks, notes and all kinds of things. If this is true, suppose we could double the amount of money in an instant, what would we have done? We would have doubled 5 per cent of the whole. What would we have added? We would have added 5 per cent to the whole. In $1,000 what would we have added? We would have added $50. But suppose in adding that $50 you have disturbed the minds of men so that the other 95 per cent was diminished, as has been done from time to time during the last few years. Suppose you apply your percentage to $950,000 and cut that in two, owing to the uncertainty you have created in the minds of men as to the quality of their money; suppose you have only affected it by 10 per cent-what is the result? Why, you have girl, and a young swell was quite taken diminished that by $95, and when you come to add the $50 that you have credited by doubling your money and deduct your $95 you will find that you are $45 worse off than when you started. You are 4 1-5 per cent worse off so far as the circulating medium that really transacts your affairs is concerned. That is one of the great reasons why we find these great disturbances in business when men tamper with the currency. I have given this illustration in answer to the assertion that the amount of money regulated prices because some money is necessary in our transactions. True some money is necessary still, because we have not yet reduced our methods of business to such a complete system that we settle everything by ac-

Yes, so is some grease on the axle of a wagon necessary in order to move it any great distance at any speed, because man has not yet succeeded in making an axle on which the wheel will revolve entirely without friction. I say, we can say with equal truth as to my wagon that because some grease is necessary on the axle, therefore the amount of grease fixes the cost of moving a ton of freight. You say that it is an absurdity;

it is not true. The more I have thought upon this question the more profoundly impressed I am that more people are concerned in the quality of the money, of actual money, than in its quantity. - Ex-Secretary Charles S. Fairchild.

While Colonel Saye's attention was called away, the old fellow sat down on a stool behind the counter and innocently leaned his broad and weary back against about 30 of the push buttons on the annunciator. An electric wire connects these buttons in rooms above with gongs which make a peculiar and astonishing amount of noise, especially when they start suddenly after midnight and keep up the racket without cessation. Well, when the old man leaned his back against the annunciator the noise began up stairs, but, of course, he didn't hear it, so he continued to sit there and push the buttons. Many people had left calls so as to catch their trains. They got up and began to dress, but they couldn't imagine why the deafening noise continued after they had pushed the button in response to signify that they were up. The others were panic-stricken. The halls were soon filled with men and women in all kinds of dishabille Each door as it was opened let an additional noise in the hall, until with the oaths of the men and the screams of the women it seemed a perfect bed-People became mixed up and into rooms with others whom they had never seen. Significant Signs. .

The eternal fitness of things is never lost sight of by Parisians. Even their shop signs are carefully adapted to aracter of the wares Every place where things are sold, from the largest to the smallest, has its designation. Some of the names are pretty, some odd and grotesque; some have an inwardness of meaning that has to be sought after, perhaps, but when found its application is unfailingly good. Probably the most familiar illustration is the great dry goods establishment known to all the civilized world as "Au Bon Marche" Be not too literal, oh student with small knowledge of French. This does not mean the good market, as some have translated it, but "At the cheap place," A florist's place is called "The Crown of Peace," and when you see that it is near a cemetery, you acknowledge the appropriateness of the name. "The Little Balcony," inscribed over a balcony gay with flowers, is an attractive name for a wine shop. . There's quite room enough for a few chairs around a table holding a bottle of wine and glasses. In order to get the full meaning of the old sign-"Better Here than Opposite," one must learn that a prison once stood across the way from it. The "Miraculous Draught of Fishes' is seen over both a fishing tackle shop and a fish market on the banks of the Seine. Many shops which sell kindling wood and small fuel have the suggestive sign, "Diabolical Charcoal." The curiosity and the odds and end shops continue the idea in their funnily appropriate names. Of these are, At the Knicknacks of by-gone Times," "At the Old Times," "At the Mascot," etc. The drug stores rarely have any sign beside the name of the dealers, but here is a rather nice one; "At the Pharmacy of the Pastor," the Dairies are often named after saints. Many mothers have expressed their singles of a Palace" on the one hand, and "At the Pewter Dish" on the other, form about as great a contrast as could be found. "Cinderella's Shoes?" Unsuspected Talent. The following anecdote was told o Robert Burns in his youth. Burns was living in the town of Ayr, and though still young, had attained more than a local reputation as a poet. One day he was passing through the main street of the town, and saw two strangers sitting in one of the inn windows. With idle curiosity he stopped to look at them. Seeing him, and thinking the rustic might afford them some amusement while they were and asked him to dine with them. tion, and proved a merry, entertaining guest. When dinner was nearly finished the strangers suggested that each should try his hand at versemaking, and that the one who failed to write a rhyme, should pay for the dinner. They felt secure in the challenge, believing that their rustic guest would pay for the meal. The rhymes were written, and Burns read the fol-"I, Johnny Peep, saw two sheep; two sheep saw me. Half a crown apiece will pay for their fleece, and I. Johnny Peep, go free." 'The strangers' astonishmen great, and they both exclaime6 "Who are you? You my he Rob And Robbie Burns did not pay for the
